CARE

KCC demands early move on Coalition social care reform to preserve 'dignity' of elderly

By Marijke Cox

COUNTY Hall has demanded the Government put social care funding reforms in place by 2015 to end the trauma of elderly people having to sell their homes to pay for care.

Tory-run Kent County Council called for action, urging the public to write to their MPs demanding recommendations set out in the Dilnot report – which includes a cap on the amount a person has to pay towards the cost of their care – be implemented by 2015 instead of the 2017 date suggested by David Cameron.

Plans are expected to be formally announced by the Coalition as part of the autumn statement.

The Dilnot paper was drawn up by a commission, chaired by economist Andrew Dilnot, to look at ways to reform the social care funding system, which is said to be unfair and unsustainable.

The first of two key recommendations in the report is a funding cap at £35,000, after which the Government would pay for care. It means an individual would be responsible for paying for their own care – possibly funded by an insurance policy taken out when people are still working – and once they have contributed £35,000 they would be eligible for full state support.

The second main recommendation is an increase in the means tested support threshold from £23,250 to £100,000.

Currently, anyone with assets over £23,250 has to bear the costs of their own care. Last year, nationally, more than 24,500 people had to sell their homes to pay care bills.

KCC members said while people accepted they had to contribute to care, the current system was unfair and left vulnerable, elderly people unable to pay expensive costs.

In a full KCC debate this week, all members across the parties agreed reforms needed to be brought in by 2015.

Tory cabinet member for adult social care and public health, Cllr Graham Gibbens, said: "We need to call on this Government to implement the Dilnot recommendations by 2015 so people can live their later years with dignity and respect."

"Our message to the Government is that Kent has passed a resolution calling for Dilnot to be introduced earlier."

"The situation is frail and elderly people becoming increasingly at risk where their own funds are being diminished and they can't pay for care. Dilnot can help overcome this."

"There are 15 MPs representing this county. I ask everybody to write a letter demanding it be introduced by 2015."

Tory member Cllr Mike Harrison, who represents Whitstable, said: "I have a mother who is 102. When she was ill two years ago we tried to find suitable nursing care for her.

"We found 800 beds in a 20 mile radius of the Whitstable area, but only 40 nursing beds in that same radius."

"We are now paying £1,100 week plus her Sunday newspaper, plus her hairdressing, plus all the other additional costs. Her beautiful bungalow had to be sold."

"She is getting the most superb care; however, the money pot is less than half full. What will happen to people such as my mother when the time comes when there is no money to pay for nursing care?"

ECONOMY

Businesses hopeful but cautious as recession ends

IT may be a little too early to start talking about green shoots of recovery, but the county's business community has reacted with cautious optimism to the news this week the UK has moved out of its double-dip recession.

According to figures released by the Office of National Statistics on Thursday morning, the nation's gross domestic product – which measures the total value of goods produced and services offered – grew by one per cent in the third quarter of 2012.

A recession is defined by a POSITIVE: The recession was declared over this week fall in GDP in two successive quarters.

And businesses say the figures reflect an increasing level of optimism, mirrored in the Federation of Small Businesses' Kent Small Business Autumn 2012 Barometer survey, published on the same day.

In it, 44 per cent of respondents said they had increased their sales when compared to the previous year.

Almost one in three small firms in Kent reported increased profits and more than one in five had taken on more staff; helping to relieve unemployment in the county.

Roger House, FSB chairman in Kent and Medway, said: "The economy is going in the right direction, with our results indicating that almost one in four (38 per cent) small businesses are forecasting better prospects in 2013."

"There is still a long way to go – growth has flatlined in the last year, so Chancellor George Osborne must use the autumn statement to sustain recovery. Small firms want to grow and if this is to happen they need confidence in the economy."

The economy had been in recession for the previous nine months and has still not recovered the levels of output seen before the financial crisis in 2008.

"There is still a long way to go, but these figures show we are on the right track," said Mr Osborne.

The FSB has 6,500 members in Kent and Medway and around 200,000 members throughout the UK.

It ran an online survey of small and micro businesses in Kent and Medway to monitor their performance. In all, 211 responses were received between October 5 and October 21.

HALLOWEEN

Blood will fall from the skies as haunted night draws near

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

TERRIFYING weather is predicted for this week-end with 'blood rain' falling from the skies in the run-up to Halloween.

But don't fear, this spooky weather is in fact a natural phenomenon caused by red dust whipped up by winds in the Sahara desert which then mixes with moisture in the clouds.

Coinciding with the run up to October 31, the freak weather could make this the spookiest Halloween yet.

According to Medway author Neil Arnold, who has written a series of books about ghostly goings on in Kent, there is a lot of paranormal activity in the area.

"Pluckley, near Ashford, is often considered Britain's most haunted village despite the fact a majority of the classic ghostly tales were made up around the 1940s," he said.

"Rochester is probably Kent's most haunted location. This former city has at least 40 ghosts in its High Street.

"Blue Bell Hill near Maidstone is possibly Kent's weirdest location. This old hill is known for its ghostly hitchhiker – a phantasmal woman in white who many believe is the victim of a car crash which took place in November, 1965, resulting in the deaths of three girls, one of whom was a bride-to-be.

"The story is mostly urban legend but there have been sightings on the hill of a ghost dating back to the early 1900s.

"There have been numerous murders and accidents on the hill. In 1934 a girl was picked up on the hill, but vanished when she reached Burham.

"In 1992 a Mr Sharp and a Mr Dawkins had two separate encounters at either end of the village with a girl who ran out in front of "Chatham Dockyard is also an incredibly haunted location, said to harbour several spirits," he added.

NEWS IN BRIEF

➔ Race attack on mother

A BLACK woman has been assaulted in Folkestone in what is believed to be a racist attack. The victim, in her 40s, was walking in Devon Road, between 8.30-9pm on Saturday, September 29, when she saw a group of around six white teenage girls. She was then punched in the head. A short while later she went to look for the offenders with her daughter and they were subjected to racist abuse by youths who were walking towards Shepway Close.

➔ Enjoy the Wedding Show

THOUSANDS of happy couples are set to descend on Dover Cruise Terminal on Sunday, October 28, for the county's top one-stop shop for anyone planning to tie the knot. The Wedding Show, organised by Archant Weddings, gives couples the chance to meet with the industry's top suppliers and includes catwalk shows, live music, and even a first dance demonstration. Tickets are free. For more information go to www.theweddingshow.co.uk.

➔ Rapist jailed for 10 years

A CHATHAM man has been sentenced to 10 years after being found guilty of rape. Adnanom Brehe, 34, of New Road, was also sentenced to seven years for attempted rape and two years for sexual assault, all to run concurrently. He was arrested after a 22-year-old woman was raped on January 2. Brehe threatened her with a large kitchen meat knife and demanded she remove her clothes, before raping her.

BONFIRE NIGHT

Who will be the stupid Guy?

AS Bonfire Night approaches, which high-profile figure is to be burnt at the stake in Edenbridge?

Paedophile Jimmy Savile, disgraced Chelsea defender John Terry, and 'plebgate' MP Andrew Mitchell are all in the running to go up in flames.

For years, the town has enjoyed the media spotlight on November 5 as it mocks the rich and famous by building a gigantic effigy in their likeness before setting it alight.

Among the previous victims are glamour model Katie Price, footballers Mario Balotelli and Wayne Rooney, and former Prime Minister Gordon Brown.

Speculation is now rife over who will be this year's target, with Jimmy Savile and the Conservative MP at the centre of the 'pleb' row Andrew Mitchell both being suggested.

Even 2006's Guy, John McCririck has given his opinion, tweeting: "Andy Murray and if not him then his awful mother."

Jon Mitchell, committee member for the Edenbridge Bonfire Society, said a meeting was held this week to make the final decision.

The society will make the official announcement on Wednesday.

Mr Mitchell said this year's decision was difficult and had to be put to a vote. He said: "I think we have all said nobody has done anything that stupid this year."

Work on the designs was done this week before the Guy is built this weekend in a "secret lair".

When pushed for more detail Mr Mitchell said: "The best hint I can give on the identity of the Guy is two arms, two legs and a head. That narrows it down quite a bit."

This year's bonfire takes place on November 3.

PCC ELECTION

Candidates line up in race to win police poll

AFTER months of speculation, the list of candidates for next month's election to find the first Police and Crime Commissioner for Kent has been published. Meet the people fighting for your support when we all go to the polls on November 15. You can vote for your first and second choice candidates. MARIJKE COX reports

ANN BARNES

Name: Ann Barnes
Party: Standing as an independent
Job: Former teacher Lives: Lyminge, near Folkestone
Background: Former chair of Kent Police Authority; former independent deputy chair of the National Association of Police Authorities.
Pledges: Relentless focus on cutting crime and catching criminals, free of party political interference. To fight any government cuts to Kent Police, and to give the electorate a bigger say in the way communities are policed with the introduction of local police boards and consultation before changes to are introduced.

DAI LIYANAGE

Name: Dai Liyanage
Party: standing as an independent
Job: Police recruitment consultant
Lives: Gillingham
Background: Member of Kent Police Authority; former Mayor of Medway; served on Kent County Council, Medway Council, and Gillingham Borough Council.

Pledges: To catch more criminals by engaging with the community more effectively, better equipment for officers and redeploying resources. A safer and calmer community through liaison between schools, parents and police to deal with vandalism and more "bobbies on the beat".

CRAIG MACKINLAY

Name: Craig Mackinlay
Party: Conservative
Job: Chartered accountant
Lives: Chatham
Background: Medway councillor; member of Kent Police Authority; magistrate.
Pledges: Zero tolerance to drugs and antisocial behaviour; strongest action and sanctions against drug dealers, and support for drug users. He promises regular public meets attended by the PCC, senior police and criminal justice system chiefs, as well as cutting down on bureaucracy.

STEVE UNCLES

Name: Steve Uncles
Party: English Democrats
Job: Contract manager in the health sector
Lives: Dartford
Background: South East area chairman for English Democrats; Neighbourhood Watch co-ordinator.
Pledges: To introduce "benefit of the doubt" policing, giving individuals defending property or family members the benefit of the doubt unless evidence their actions were excessive. Would declare the county a drug-free zone and remove all fixed police speed cameras.

PIERS WAUCHOPE

Name: Piers Wauchope
Party: Ukup
Job: Criminal barrister
Lives: Tunbridge Wells
Background: Tunbridge Wells councillor; served for eight years as a Tory councillor in Camden.
Pledges: A clear commitment to prioritise drug-related crimes and antisocial behaviour, with a clear plan on crime reduction and defence of frontline policing. Is determined "to restore real policing values" by re-establishing the police in the community and working to ensure there are more police on the beat.

HARRIET YEO

Name: Harriet Yeo
Party: Labour
Job: Charity fundraising manager
Lives: Ashford
Background: Ashford councillor; president of Transport Salaried Staff Association; chair of Labour's National Executive Committee.
Pledges: No privatisation of Kent Police and ensuring criminals are both punished and rehabilitated. She promises to visit every constituency twice a year to speak to a wide variety of groups and act as a facilitator between communities and the officers who serve them.

QUESTION: What is the Kent Police and Crime Commissioner?

ANSWER: It replaces the existing Kent Police Authority which currently sets the policing budget and holds Kent Police to account. The PCC will have the power to hire and fire the chief constable, set the county's policing plan, set the Kent Police budget, engage with the community, and commission services.

QUESTION: Who can vote and why should you bother?

ANSWER: Everyone who is eligible to vote can go to the polls. The elected person will be a powerful influence on how our police patrol our streets. They will set the priorities for Kent and make sure they are suitably funded.

INDEPENDENTS LEVEL ACCUSATIONS OF POLITICAL BIAS

NON-party political candidates who were hoping to stand in the election for the most influential policing position in Kent have branded the process "unfair".

They accused the Home Office of designing the election for political parties and said it had been unfairly weighted against independent hopefuls.

Of the six candidates standing in the poll, four are from political backgrounds and the two independents – Dai Liyanage and Ann Barnes – are high-profile individuals; the former being a previous Lib Dem mayor in Medway, and the latter the ex-chair of Kent Police Authority – the organisation being replaced by the PCC on November 22.

Graham Wanstall, from Dover, had been hoping to stand as an independent.

He explained: "The deposit to register as a candidate is £5,000 – it would be far more reasonable to be £500-1,000.

"If you don't have a party to help raise this money it puts you at a disadvantage.

"You need 100 signatures, too, from all over Kent. This is easier for someone in a political party as they have members all over.

"The PCC should have a free mind and not be controlled by a party."

Other casualties include Thanet councillor Ian Driver, Ken Little from Whitstable, and property tycoon Fergus Wilson.

Mr Little said there was an "entrenched bias" towards political parties, including the £5,000 deposit. Mr Wilson dropped out citing government cuts to policing.

The Home Office said: "PCC candidates could have experience in the private, voluntary or public sector. They don't have to be politicians to stand. They can be independent of political parties.

"This is an opportunity for people from all walks of life to stand and to make a difference."

Oyster prices to rocket as French swoop after stocks killed by herpes

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

AMOROUS Frenchmen are snapping up Kent's oysters after their supplies were mysteriously killed off by herpes.

The increased demand could lead to price rises on the Kent coast of around 30 per cent.

The French love oysters, which are famed for their apparent aphrodisiac properties.

But a virus is laying waste to their own stocks, so they are turning to Whitstable and other Kent areas, known around the world for producing the best quality oysters.

French suppliers are buying up as many oysters as they can to replace their own dwindling numbers, caused by a new micro-variant of oyster herpesvirus. The disease is always present, but has become lethal and is now widespread in France, wiping out a large proportion of oysters before they breed the next generation. It's thought not to affect humans, but can easily wipe out whole colonies of the shellfish.

As chefs wonder if they can continue including oysters on their menus to keep romantics in the mood, suppliers in Kent are seeing an upturn in demand from across the Channel.

Casanova's conquest of some 122 women has in part been put down to the 50 oysters he scoffed for breakfast. And it's not just a myth – scientists believe the high levels of zinc and amino acids help boost the libido in both sexes.

Britain annually produces 1,100 tonnes of oysters but it seems around 15 per cent is immediately going abroad. And it's no wonder – the French used to produce an incredible 130,000 tonnes.

John Bayes has run Seasalter Shellfish for more than 50 years, and has an oyster bed off Reculver. He said: "Yes, the French are coming over and buying in large numbers."

"Prices have been stagnant for 30 years, but over the past year, they have risen to a half decent level. It's not as good as it used to be, but it's getting better and we are just about matching inflation rises now."

"I have worked hard setting up links with French companies and that is going well. We are also setting up a new building to sell market oysters, which is an exciting project."

David Jarrad, director of the Shellfish Association, said: "The French have been to the UK and are buying as much as they can, both in market size oysters but also in half-grown stocks and in seed stocks."

He warned of a shortage over the winter and sharp price rises.

The main shortages are for rock oysters which the Whitstable Oyster Company sells to diners for £9 per half dozen, but it produces its own restaurant supplies and has kept prices the same as last year.

A spokesman said: "Some London restaurants have put up their prices dramatically. We are lucky because we have our own supply."

MasterChef star Wallace caught speeding in Jaguar sports car

By Chrissie Daniels

MASTERCHEF star Gregg Wallace found himself in hot water after he was clocked driving at 82mph in his swanky sports car.

More used to being in front of the TV cameras, the presenter found himself on the wrong end of a speed camera as he was clocked breaking the 50mph limit in his £70,000 Jaguar XK on the A249 between Maidstone and Sittingbourne.

And it cost him a £1,330 fine, with six penalty points added to his driving licence. In addition, the punishment was spiced up with £85 in court costs.

He was snapped on April 22 on Detling Hill.

The TV personality, 47, who lives in Seasalter, near Whitstable, pleaded guilty to the offence after being caught by the mobile speed camera unit, but did not appear in court in Maidstone.

Katherine Barrett, communications officer for the Kent and Med-

CAUGHT ON CAMERA: TV star Gregg Wallace was snapped in his Jaguar driving at 82mph in a 50mph zone way Safety Camera Partnership, said: "Safety cameras operate at sites where people have been killed or seriously injured.

"On this stretch of road from Maidstone towards the county showground there were eight people killed or seriously injured within the signed camera area before the site was installed, and two people in the last three years.

"We do not want to catch people speeding, we would like them to drive within the speed limits to as to

SEX SCANDAL

Senior management at BBC must 'fall on their swords' over Savile scandal, says MP

By Marijke Cox

VETERAN Tory MP Sir Roger Gale has warned that senior bosses at the BBC may have to "fall on their swords" over the Jimmy Savile scandal.

It followed a veiled threat in a letter from BBC Trust chairman Lord Patten to culture secretary Maria Miller suggesting the Government should not question the corporation's editorial independence.

North Thanet Tory MP Sir Roger criticised Lord Patten and said there needed to be a "clear-out" at senior level.

"It is as if your favourite aunt has been revealed to be on the game," he said.

"If Lord Patten is not able to grasp that then I fear that not only the director-general, but also the chairman of the BBC Trust are going to have to fall on their swords.

"If the true independence of the BBC, which is vital as our public service broadcaster, is to be maintained and if public trust is to be restored then what is needed is a clear-out of senior management and a change in the culture of self-righteousness and the injection of a little humility."

Sir Roger worked at the BBC as a director and producer during the height of Savile's fame. He said he had not witnessed the abuse himself, but "could not believe" senior staff did not know what was going on.

"George Entwistle, as the current director-general, has been hung out to dry while having very little responsibility for these matters and the Newsnight editor, Peter Rippon, would appear to be the fall guy for years of BBC self-preservation," he said.

This week, members of the culture, media and sport select committee grilled Mr Entwistle over the Savile affair and the decision to shelve the Newsnight programme last December.

The BBC later admitted the programme makers were aware of allegations Savile had abused teenagers on the corporation's premises. But despite this, at Christmas – two months after Savile died and weeks after the exposé was cancelled – tributes about the late DJ were broadcast on the BBC.

Folkestone and Hythe Tory MP Damian Collins quizzed Mr Entwistle as a member of the select committee.

He questioned whether the director-general – who is also editor-in-chief – should have been routinely told about serious criminal investigations being looked at by BBC reporters.

"I understand Mr Entwistle cannot see everything the BBC broadcasts. But if the Savile allegations did not qualify for his attention, what would?" he said.

Oldest Battle of Britain pilot dies, but poetry keeps his memory alive

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

THE oldest surviving Spitfire pilot to have fought the Luftwaffe during the Battle of Britain in the skies over Kent, has died aged 99.

As well as his dogged determination to save the nation from Hitler's invaders, Flight Lieutenant William Walker also left a major legacy to the county.

The keen poet donated copyright on some of his work to raise money for the Battle of Britain Memorial at Capel-le-Ferne which is fundraising to pay for a new education centre called The Wing.

Memorial supporter and spokesman Malcolm Triggs said: "I used to edit some of his poetry. It is an amazing legacy and we can't thank him enough for what he did for his country and of course the memorial."

They are still trying to raise £2 million for the education centre and are calling on the public for support.

Incredibly, Flt Lt Walker survived being shot down over the Channel in August, 1940, after being sent to see off German bombers approaching Dover. He was even shot in the ankle.

Bailing out, he plunged into the icy waters and clung to a shipwreck on Goodwin Sands, until eventually being rescued by a passing fishing boat.

Flt Lt Walker enjoyed recounting the story of the surgeon prising the armour-piercing bullet from his ankle during his stay at the RAF Hospital, in Halton, Buckinghamshire.

It shot out and hit the ceiling. He kept the bullet as a souvenir.

When the war ended, he eventually became chairman of brewery Ind Coope.

He had been planning to attend the trust's End of the Battle Gala Dinner where guests included the patron, Prince Michael of Kent, last Thursday but suffered a stroke and was taken to hospital.

Mr Triggs said: "His absence saddened the gathering at the dinner and was made even more poignant by the fact that in recent years it had become traditional for William to raise a toast to his fellow Battle of Britain pilots after reading his poem Absent Friends."

His life was always the RAF and he was among those who attended the annual memorial flypast at Capel-le-Ferne, last year.

At the time, the daring pilot told this newspaper: "I write poems for pleasure and as a mental stimulant and had never envisaged that a day might come when they might be used to help a cause so close to my heart.

"When the Battle of Britain Memorial Trust decided to print a book of my verses, I immediately realised it was an opportunity to repay, in some measure, a great debt of gratitude for many wonderful years of kindness and help.

"By donating the copyright of all my verses to the trust I hope it will prove to be helpful in raising revenue towards the important learning centre project, and for maintaining our memorial site."

He added: "My annual pilgrimage to Capel-le-Ferne to attend our memorial service and see our memorial wall gives me the opportunity to see again the names of so many friends who are constantly in my thoughts, and it is comforting to know they will always be remembered and thought of by those who visit the site."

To donate to The Wing send cheques payable to the Battle of Britain Memorial Trust to The Secretary, Battle of Britain Memorial Trust, PO Box 337, West Malling, ME6 9AA.

Foul language gets the red card in bid to get families onto terraces

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

WHILE attention has been focused on the bad language on the pitch of players like John Terry, one club is trying to cut out swearing by fans in the stands.

Margate FC play in the Ryman Premier, and have their eye on a promotion push. Club officials are keen to improve crowds and match-day income by bringing more families through the turnstiles.

But mums and dads are less likely to bring their children along if there are obscene chants on the terraces.

So now club officials have called on the club's loyal supporters to drop the swearing, and signs have gone up at the Hartsdown Park stadium reading: "Please respect the well being of our children! No foul language."

Club spokesman Steve Wells said: "It all started last year when there was a particular incident around language and behaviour of some of our supporters.

"The directors are acutely aware of the need to continue to develop the club's good community credentials.

"We are keen to attract families and we don't want excessive bad language to put people off coming along to see the matches.

"Following this incident in

FRIENDLY: The club want to encourage more families to watch the away game, the directors received some complaints, not only from parents, but also some of the older supporters.

"Our CEO Cliff Egan did go and speak with some of the supporters, who add to our atmosphere, and ask them to change some of the chants to make them cleaner, and to be fair they have responded well, and now include the word 'shark' for another word.

"The fans have really taken this on, and we are even seeing some inflatable sharks being waved around. Some of the fans who use the language are also those that create some of the atmosphere as well."

around 400 from 1,400 a decade ago.

Mr Wells said the club were making efforts to attract more fans, with offers like free child tickets if they are with a paying adult, and partnerships with local organisations and colleges.

He said: "The signs we have put up basically say we want a more family friendly atmosphere and to keep the language down and they are having a positive effect."

And the Northern League, the world's oldest, is reported to be introducing 'swear police' to monitor language on the pitch.

■ See the sports section for an interview with Margate winger Alex Rhodes about racism in football.

LANDMARKS

Cliffs are top-10 icon

THE White Cliffs of Dover have been named in the top 10 of iconic British landmarks in a poll of thousands of children. The vote by 2,500 youngsters across the UK, conducted by hotel chain Travelodge, saw them pick historic sites over modern landmarks in a list published this week. The famous cliffs at Dover came 10th on the list, which was topped by Big Ben in London.

DEATH

Ex-council leader dies

TRIBUTES have been pouring in to former Gravesham council leader Mike Snelling who died last Friday, aged 66, following a brief illness. Cllr Snelling was a Tory borough councillor and a county councillor, representing Gravesham Rural. Cllr Snelling was leader of Gravesham council from 2007-11. He leaves his wife Heather, two daughters, and four grandsons.

BUSINESS

Actress backs traders' fight over huge hike in shop rents

By Dean Kilpatrick

dean.kilpatrick@archant.co.uk

A TELEVISION actress with a home in Whitstable has added her voice to a campaign looking to save the seaside town's high street.

Fay Ripley, famous for playing Jenny Gifford in ITV's comedy drama Cold Feet, has backed a protest group fighting an increase in shop rents.

Twenty shops are to be hit by the rise in rent costs which will see some shopkeepers paying 100 per cent more for properties owned by Whitstable Non-Ecclesiastical Charities.

There are fears the price hike will see a number of chain shops come into the town, "killing" its wide range of independent stores – which won it the title the best town in the UK in 2010.

And the 46-year-old actress – who has starred in a string of Tesco adverts – told KoS the reputation of the town could be put at risk if well-loved independent traders went out of business.

She said: "When you hike up rents, landlords and councils have to take responsibility for the long-term effect of that because building character doesn't happen overnight.

"Coastal towns are in a recession and there are plenty of beaches around. But why do people have their home there and why do people have their holidays there? Because Whitstable is fabulous."

The actress and food writer said she had grown to love Whitstable after hearing about it "on the grapevine" in London.

She said: "I am such a fan of Whitstable and everything it has to offer. I really admire it as a town and that is why I am supporting the campaign.

"In this current economic time, they have managed to keep their head above the water when a lot of other businesses are struggling.

"It has a very individual and quirky character and I think to lose that would be a terrible shame."

The actress also spoke of her love of Kent's produce, and said her favourite time of year in the seaside town was the autumn months.

Save Whitstable's Shops has welcomed Ripley's backing.

Spokesman Brian Hitcham said: "It's really nice to have someone such as Fay on board because it grabs people's attention.

"We talk to people who come in our shops and when we tell them of the rent increases, they see it as something that will kill the town."

Save Whitstable's Shops has commissioned an independent report on rents from former estate agent Kim Foster.

Estate agents Caxtons, who are dealing with the price hikes, said the increases were being applied to reflect the current nature of the open market and was a symbol of Whitstable's success.

EMERGENCY SERVICES

Animals saved from fire

MORE than 30 firefighters tackled a fire at farm buildings last Sunday morning – and battled to also protect livestock. The drama unfolded in Spode Lane, Cowden, as firefighters brought the fire, in a range of farm buildings used as stables and a tack room, under control. All animals were removed to safety and ventilation fans were used to push smoke away from livestock.

CRIME

Teen 'held up with gun'

A TEENAGE boy was attacked and his iPod and mobile phone stolen following a robbery in Broadstairs' Pierremont Park last Saturday night – with police fearing one of the gang may have had a gun. The 15-year-old boy was in the park with his friends when a group of around four to five males approached him. It is said that one of the group appeared to have a gun.

Fleming's local hides secret past Bond would be proud of

By Joe Bill

joe.bill@archant.co.uk

AS IF timed to coincide with the release of the latest James Bond film Skyfall, Kent's culinary past has served up a secret story of its own, even entwining the great spy himself.

Well known for being home to Bond author Ian Fleming, Kent has a rich history associated with the famous secret agent, and in particular the pub where Fleming used write – The Duck Inn at Pett Bottom, near Canterbury.

Now run by chef/patron Jonathan Prynn, the pub, built in 1623, has a far richer history than just being a Bond fan tourist attraction.

It's no revelation the village was the fictional home to a young Bond where he lived with his aunt as a child. It has also documented in Fleming's 1964 novel You Only Live Twice, where Bond's obituary mentions the "lovely village pub, The Duck Inn".

However, what isn't widely known is that from 1974-81 the pub was awarded a coveted Michelin star for its fine food and excellent service.

But here is where the story becomes a little murky. In 2001, restaurant experts at Michelin heralded The Stag Inn at Titley, Herefordshire, as the first-ever pub to gain a star, thereby launching the modern 'gastro-pub' trend. But since The Duck Inn had held one more than 25 years previously, surely the history books should be re-written proclaiming the Pett Bottom local as the original gastro-pub?

Michelin Guide's UK editor Rebecca Burr said: "The Duck Inn was obviously well ahead of its time. Pub food in the 70s was often not very good. So you can definitely say this star would have put Pett Bottom and Canterbury on the map.

"But the pub symbol [for serving good food] was not introduced to the Michelin Guide until 1998."

Therefore, The Duck Inn was not described as a pub in the 1974 guide.

Mr Prynn was surprised to learn his establishment had held an award, but had an inkling of the eatery's successful past.

He said: "I didn't know the place had a star, but I knew they had high quality food here at one point, because people have always commented 'back in 75 we used to come here every weekend'."

The 29-year-old has been in charge of The Duck Inn for almost five years is keen on regaining the pub's reputation for good food.

He said: "It's nice to know this piece of history now, and if we were one of the first pubs to have a Michelin star then that's something we must aim to get it back again one day."

WILDLIFE

Gorilla family getting set for the long trip 'home' to Africa from Port Lympne

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

A FAMILY of gorillas will soon be leaving Kent and heading to the lowlands of Africa.

The man behind the project wants it to spark a global debate on the role of the world's zoos in conservation.

Eleven western lowland gorillas are moving from Port Lympne Wild Animal Park – and it's the first time an entire captive family group will be rehomed on the continent.

It is the work of the Aspinall Foundation, which aims to maintain threatened populations in their natural habitat.

The family will be moved early next year, along with six Javan gibbons, eight Javan langurs, and two bull elephants. Three black rhinos have already been released this year and are all doing well in the wild in Tanzania.

Damian Aspinall helps run the foundation set up by his father John, and since 1996 has successfully taken dozens of creatures back to Africa.

He said: "The Aspinall Foundation's Back To The Wild initiative is unique and comprises of easily the most ambitious and wide-ranging reintroductions of endangered species into the wild ever undertaken anywhere in the world.

"Equally important, it marks the Foundation's absolute commitment to intensify the global debate around the role of wildlife parks and zoos.

"We passionately believe that the days are long gone when it could be seen as justifiable to keep animals in captivity simply for the purposes of display or education. True conservation must be fundamental to the existence of any collection of captive animals in the 21st century.

"We believe this has to involve the protection, where necessary, of endangered species coupled with successful and sustainable breeding programmes – always with the ultimate aim wherever possible of returning animals to the wild.

"This can be the only possible justification in the 21st century for the existence of collections of animals in captivity."

The latest group of animals going to the area in Congo and Gabon involves 200kg Djala and his five 'wives' and five cubs, aged between eight months and six years. The youngsters have never known a home outside Howletts and Port Lympne wild animal parks.

The 30-year-old male had originally been saved from poachers before arriving at Port Lympne in the 1990s.

AIR TRAVEL

Dutch dinner sparks flights speculation

THE airline considering launching flights from Manston Airport to Amsterdam will be hosting a dinner in Kent next month, fuelling speculation that a decision on the issue could be imminent.

KLM Royal Dutch Airlines, which is merged with Air France, revealed last month it was in talks with Manston owner Infratil about daily passenger flights to Schiphol in Amsterdam.

From there, passengers could travel to destinations including America and Asia. This means east Kent could be the gateway to the rest of the world and residents would no longer have to travel to London to fly internationally.

A timescale for the final decision on the move has not yet been announced, but KoS can reveal a dinner is to be hosted by KLM and Air France. The buffet dinner will take place at Canterbury Cathedral Lodge on November 13.

A KLM spokeswoman was keeping tight-lipped about the event and said a decision on the Manston flights has not yet been made.

She said: "The purpose of the event is that KLM will make an announcement."

But when pushed, she was unable to confirm whether this was related to Manston.

As part of the decision-making process, KLM conducted a survey to get an idea of demand.

There was a huge response, with 9,066 people filling out the online form, and 96 per cent saying they would rather fly from Thanet.

CRIME

Victim support groups set to benefit by £50m as justice minister hits offenders in the pocket

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

VICTIMS of crime are to benefit from an additional £50 million of help and assistance – taken straight from the pockets of criminals.

Minister for Victims Helen Grant has overseen a massive overhaul of the way services for victims and witnesses of crime are funded, and the 'victim surcharge' paid by offenders will be increased and extended.

Currently offenders only contribute around a sixth of the funding that supports victims' services, with taxpayers providing the rest.

Extending the surcharge is the next step in a drive to see offenders provide up to £50m more each year for victims' services. This is on top of the £66m central government already provides.

The money raised will go to support local organisations that have a proven track record in supporting victims.

Among those that could benefit are children's groups, and charities supporting victims of rape, domestic violence, hate crime, burglary, anti-social behaviour and other violent crimes including murder and manslaughter.

Ms Grant, who is also MP for Maidstone and The Weald, said: "Only £1 in every six the Government spends supporting victims of crime comes from offenders. Hard-working and innocent taxpayers pay for the rest. This balance is wrong and is something I am determined to change."

"Criminals create victims; as well as being punished for their crimes, they should help to repair the damage they have done."

Previously the surcharge stood at just £15 on top of any fine – with criminals receiving prison sentences escaping any financial penalty.

But under rules introduced this month, those convicted and forced to pay a financial penalty will have to pay an additional 10 per cent of any fine, with a maximum of £120 and a minimum of £20. A conditional discharge has a £15 surcharge and a community sentence £60. Custodial sentences add a charge of £80, £100 or £120.

The charges will not apply for Fixed Penalty Notices, including those issued for motoring offences.

Ms Grant said: "For the first time, more offenders will literally be made to pay for their crimes. And the more serious the sentence, the more they will be forced to pay. Criminals need to step up and recognise the impact their crime have on others."

The announcement comes after it was revealed that, in the last year, around £800,000 has been taken from prisoners' wages and given to the charity Victim Support.

Winston's Wish, a national charity providing emotional and practical support to some of the 24,000 children who are bereaved of a parent each year and those coping with the death of a sibling, is one group which receives Victims Surcharge support.

It helps people like the family of 19-year-old Mark, who was murdered in an

THE help offered by organisations that support victims can be crucial in enabling people to recover from a traumatic event.

Sue (not her real name) now works with an organisation which may benefit from the new funding and was driven to help others after enduring harrowing emotional, mental, physical and sexual abuse at the hands of her ex-husband, which drove her to nearly commit suicide.

After three attempts to escape and 10 years of mental and physical torment, she managed to free herself from a living nightmare.

"I was a naive 20-year-old; I'd just had one other relationship and he groomed me. He was romantic and powerful at the same time in my eyes, but it was just one-and-a-half months after we met that the first incident took place.

"He got angry about something and slapped me. I was in shock, but very quickly he persuaded me he didn't mean to do it by apologising."

Marriage meant cutting family ties, and Sue was pregnant in the first six months.

"We were at a party and he accused me of flirting with someone. Back at home we were in bed when the questions started again. They were followed by slaps and punches which lasted three or four hours. Then came a violent rape."

"It was never just one slap. I even used to clock-watch knowing how long he would keep beating me."

"I know now he had a second relationship – a mistress and four children he fathered with her while he was married to me. Another child came later."

With her two children Sue finally fled the marital home, and women's refuges and family members helped her before she filed for divorce.

When her son reached 20 he wanted to find his father, and they discovered on the internet he'd died in a road accident.

"A day or so later I just collapsed. I'd spent 12 years looking over my shoulder, dreading being found by him, but now he was dead and I was so grateful he was because finally I could stop being scared."

"When a woman has been through this sort of abuse, there is only so much help that can be given – she will always be haunted. But there is practical and therapeutic help which can make a big difference."

unprovoked attack in 2009.

After attending a residential group for families bereaved by murder, Mark's mother said: "From all the negatives in our lives, this is a positive. It was so good to know that professionals were keeping me safe; helping me to express myself"

Star Pixie launches 2012 Poppy Appeal

BROMLEY pop princess Pixie Lott performed at a concert this week to launch the Royal British Legion Poppy Appeal.

The 21-year-old, from Bickley, is the face of Poppy Appeal 2012 alongside singer and TV personality Alesha Dixon.

Pixie marked the start of the appeal at a free event in Trafalgar Square in London on Wednesday.

The concert also starred The Military Wives Choir and James Fox, star of West End musical Let It Be, who sang the Poppy Appeal 2012 single Landlocked.

The fundraising drive aims to raise £42 million to help pay for care and support for service personnel and military families.

Poppies will go on sale from Saturday until Remembrance Sunday on November 11, when the traditional two-minute silence will be held across Kent.

WILDLIFE

Protecting bloodsuckers so they live to bite another day

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

JUST seeing a leech gives many people the creeps – but one man spends his working life making sure the bloodsuckers are kept safe and sound.

In the 1980s the centuries-old medical practice of using leeches for bloodletting was revived to help patients following microsurgery, and it's down to a Kent man to maintain Britain's supply of the slippery customers so they survive in their natural habitat.

Brian Banks loves to wade through Romney Marsh in his hunt for leeches to ensure they are kept from danger.

Catching them is fairly easy – just gently splash the water and if they are hungry they come to you.

Mr Banks then scoops them up with a net, or picks them off his waders and places them in their new fully-lined ditch.

He is one of the few people in Britain licensed to catch and handle medicinal leeches and has been moving a colony of them safely out of the way of a new water main being built across the Marsh.

He said: "You just splash the water and the commotion attracts the leeches if they are hungry, you then net them."

"The medicinal leech can be found in just a few places in the UK, and Romney Marsh has one of the largest populations. Because they have important medicinal uses we have to make sure we protect the remaining colonies."

None of those he handles are used in medicine, as leech farms meet the doctors' needs, but Mr Banks ensures the few remaining in the wild are preserved.

He said: "This is about maintaining breeding populations and protecting them.

"There are not many places where you can find them and it looks like Romney Marsh, for reasons we don't really understand, has the strongest population in Britain.

"They have a commercial value being used in hospitals and places like that for conditions that involve bleeding, and their enzymes prevent blood clotting. That makes them of interest to people researching heart disease and strokes.

"I am determined to avoid commercial exploitation. They are wild populations and my interest is to protect them."

Voles will also be moved away from the pipeline's path.

Affinity Water's pipelines manager Steve McIntegart said: "We have learnt a great deal about the way to handle construction. We have been working on the Marsh for years on different sites so were not starting from scratch."

The company is spending £6m to replace an older pipeline at high risk of bursts.

EMERGENCY SERVICE

24-hour service planned for 'quiet' Kent Air Ambulance

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

THE Air Ambulance could be flying around the clock within two years – but officials promise they will keep noise to a minimum.

The service, which is funded entirely by contributions from the public, has already merged with Surrey and Sussex, but current rules dictate it can only fly during daylight hours.

Now the next step could be to have the aircraft available over the skies of Kent day and night.

Chief executive of the Kent, Surrey and Sussex Air Ambulance, Adrian Bell, said they operate two aircraft with two medical teams. One of these is based at Marden in Kent, the other at Dunsfold in Surrey, soon to be shifted to Redhill.

Mr Bell said the transfer is "part of exciting new plans to make its life-saving service available 24 hours a day".

He added: "Until recently, Civil Aviation Authority regulations allowed delivery of the Helicopter Emergency Medical Service only by daylight, but recent changes now allow this by night as well.

"The charity initially plans to operate one helicopter and one medical team by night, but will look to expand the service if the need arises."

The Marden aircraft will continue to operate from the charity's headquarters where it is hoped to develop a night service during the next 24 months.

Mr Bell said: "The charity presently treats almost 1,000 of the most severely ill and injured patients per year, wherever they need us.

"This change in regulations will allow us to treat up to 400 more patients per year."

An analysis of 999 data was carried out to achieve the best possible coverage, and it was concluded the Redhill Aerodrome move was logical as it allowed the use of one aircraft to reach any part of Kent, Surrey and Sussex in under 20 minutes without needing to refuel.

Any expansion of the service will be assessed at a later date.

The introduction of night flights will increase the charity's annual costs by about £1 million to £6m, so it is calling on the public for more support of the life-saving service.

In other parts of the country where night flying has started, some residents have complained of extra noise, but the Kent service said it plans to keep it to a minimum.

Mr Bell said: "There will be no low flying and we have the quietest helicopters available."

Independent businesses rewarded for going it alone

THE first annual Kent Independent Trader Awards has showcased the rising talent among the county's business owners.

The event was held at Bar 10, in the Royal Star Arcade, Maidstone, and organiser Hilary Steel, from Kent Ideas Ltd, said: "With more than 50 business represented and nearly 100 guests it goes to prove that the independents in this county have a voice."

The KIT Awards recognised businesses in 11 categories including Start-Up Business of the Year, and Independent Retailer of the Year.

The winners were chosen by an independent panel of judges comprising of Russell Burton, Principle Chambers; Lee Bennett, MDP; and Sharon Wilding of The Purple Edge.

The judges also chose the KIT Entrepreneur of the Year from the 11 winners. This was awarded to Julie Anderson from RAP Office Contractors.

Kent Independent Traders promotes the benefits of supporting local businesses, many of which form an integral part of local communities while also offering business owners the chance to grow through training and development.

The support network comprises of experienced business owners throughout the county and in-

KENT REMEMBERED

IMMORTALISED: Canterbury Cathedral's memorial to Archbishop Thomas Becket, murdered in 1170

Holy relics that could make the crippled walk

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THE strange stories of the Christian relics which were such a strong feature of life in the Middle Ages is the subject of a new book.

Holy Bones, Holy Dust: How Relics Shaped the History of Medieval Europe by Charles Freeman, recalls how artifacts with connections to saints – or even Christ himself – were everywhere.

Whether bones, hair, blood, teeth, milk, pieces of the True Cross or Crown of Thorns, they were thought to bring the believer close to a saint who might ask God for help on their behalf.

And foremost among the shrines was that of Thomas Becket, which brought world renown to Canterbury Cathedral.

The murder of the archbishop on December 29, 1170, is part of the mythology of both Kent and the Christian church.

His tomb no longer stands, but memorials and stained glass windows to the saint are an important facet of the imposing home of the worldwide Anglican church.

Four knights from the court of King Henry II killed the cleric in the cathedral, the first downward sword stroke glanced off his skull and cut through to the shoulder bone, two more cuts to the head followed and as Becket fell, the top of his head was sliced off.

The murder followed a series of disagreements between the churchman and King Henry, formerly a good friend.

The knights most likely acted on their own accord, but the monarch was vilified and undertook penance.

And in the aftermath of the killing it was quickly put forward that Becket was a martyr to his faith – even though history points to disagreements on both sides.

A witness called Benedict of Peterborough said the ransacking of Becket's palace – which took place after his death – was an imitation of the dividing up of Christ's clothes after the crucifixion.

And another important factor was his appearance. Freeman quotes Benedict on Becket's likeness in death "while blood in the likeness of a crown, perhaps in a sign of sanctity lay around his head, his face nevertheless seemed entirely freed from blood, except for a thin line which descended from the right temple to the left cheek, crossing his nose".

The body was buried without any washing or embalming, and its own blood acted as 'perfume' with no spices added.

Then miracles were reported. First a shirt dipped in blood was said to have cured a paralysed woman and "the blind see, the deaf hear, the mute speak, the crippled walk, the fevered are relieved, the possessed are freed from the devil" according to a chronicler named John of Salisbury.

The prior then sent a petition to the Pope for canonisation so "Thomas, of holy memory, once Archbishop of Canterbury, who accepting the supreme penalty in defence of the Church's liberties, attained the crown of martyrdom".

Pilgrims flocked to Canterbury, bringing money and other wealth to its inhabitants – as Chaucer once described.

The story has a bizarre end. When Henry VIII fell out with the Church of Rome he set about destroying shrines associated with the Catholic faith.

The King portrayed Becket as a rebel against the crown and he was 'tried' at his tomb – by being ordered to perform a miracle in 30 days.

When nothing happened, in September, 1538, his ornate tomb was broken up and his bones scattered.

But saints' relics continued to be prized well into recent times – and when Pope John Paul II died samples of blood were displayed in a church in his home city of Krakow, Poland.

Motoring lawyer David Barton is keen to educate young drivers on how the law will affect them once they have gained their licence...

KENT'S young drivers are dangerously ill-informed when it comes to how the law affects them.

It seems that every other week there are sad new statistics about the number of young drivers who have car accidents – and suffer life-changing consequences or worse still, lose their lives – just months after passing their driving tests.

Inexperienced new drivers are more likely to have an accident in the first two years after ditching their L-plates than at any other time.

Between 2006-08 alone, more than 500 young people died or were seriously injured on Kent roads.

As a motoring lawyer with 30 years' experience of representing Kent motorists, I have first-hand knowledge of the risks of driving dangerously.

Time and again, I've met people who have made bad choices behind the wheel – ranging from a simple speeding ticket to being involved in a serious accident involving other drivers.

It saddens me some of those have been new drivers with only a few months' driving experience and no real knowledge about how the law affects them once they pass their test.

I am also a parent of three young drivers and know how worrying it is when a new driver tears up the L-plates and drives solo for the first time.

So when the Association for British Insurers (ABI) recently called for an overhaul in how young people learn to drive, I took notice. It's an issue I feel passionately about.

The ABI recommended that learners spend a minimum of one year with L-plates before they can take a test. And that when they do, there should be restrictions on night-time driving and how many young passengers they can carry, and a reduced drink-driving limit.

Spending longer learning to drive would give young people more time to realise the responsibilities they have when they get in a car – and increase their awareness of the countless hazards that have to be negotiated on our roads.

Through my work as a lawyer, I know that many young people are out there on the roads with little knowledge about the law, or believing incorrect information passed on from their friends.

There are some alarming myths that need to be busted.

Few young drivers realise you can lose your licence on just six points in the first two years after passing your test (compared to 12 points for everyone else).

Some think you can drink two pints of lager and still legally drive. And that if you eat a big meal it'll actually lower your alcohol levels if you have a breath test. Then there's drug-driving and using a mobile phone behind the wheel, both trends growing at an alarming rate.

I know how worrying it is when a new driver tears up L-plates for the first time

Many young drivers don't realise the onus is on them to understand the law – ignorance is no excuse.

That's why I'm touring Kent schools to talk to sixth formers who are learning to drive. It's part of a campaign called Lose Your L-Plates, Not Your Licence.

I'm hoping it will encourage them to drive more responsibly when they're given the freedom of being a qualified driver.

I'm asking teachers or schools who'd like me to give a talk to their students to get in touch via my website www.motorists-lawyer-kent.co.uk.

Learning to drive is such an exciting time for young people, but it comes with responsibility. It's down to those of us with years of experience to pass that knowledge on.

Don't ignore this crucial vote – take part in history

THE race is well and truly on for the position of Kent's first Police and Crime Commissioner.

But almost certainly there will be many people still unaware or unsure of what the whole fuss is about. We can only hope that a fierce fight between the candidates will get people talking.

It's crucial that people take to the polls. This is about policing; something everyone will have an opinion on at some point in their life. The PCC will hold the most influential policing role in Kent and will set the county's priorities – your priorities. So while the battle rages on between the contenders, take a moment to look at what they are offering and take part in this piece of history on November 15.

Official end to summer

IT'S that time of year again when many of us will spend a whole day confused as to why it's got dark so early and the TV schedule is not matching times on our watches.

Let's try and avoid that this weekend and remember the clocks go back, and with it we get a long Sunday lie-in.

We need the new airport

MUCH has already been written about the estuary airport project, but the facts are:

The proposal has never been formally debated with the arguments for, or against, properly aired by well-informed people.

The 'Say No' campaign has many vociferous supporters, though many seem very ill informed.

The fact of the matter is the country must have an up-to-date international airport if it is to remain economically competitive. Heathrow is now unfit for purpose, being really only a former RAF aerodrome, located in the wrong place.

A new, specially built airport is going to be created, as it must, and at the end of the day everybody will have to accept the elected government's decision, like it or not.

Just think about some of the advantages:

The horrible monstrosity that is Kingsnorth power station chimney stack will be pulled down and all the other obsolete industrial eyesores, cranes, sheds, jetties, old barges, etc, will disappear.

The wreck of the Richard Montgomery will be removed or made safe, at long last. Acres of derelict and neglected salt marsh will be reclaimed, and put to good use. I am certain the birds will just move elsewhere.

The Medway towns will be rejuvenated and will come to life again after decades of depression and poverty. Property prices will rise. Business will expand, and many new jobs will become available. A prosperous future for the whole modernised area will become a fact.

The 'noise factor' is a red herring as the flight path will be predominately east-west, and over water, and at least five miles distant.

Regarding pollution – just go outside and look up. The sky overhead (in Rainham) is already full of high flying aircraft and their contrails, with three or four being visible during daylight, even more at night when they show lights.

The time has come to stop burying heads in sand, to 'think big', and to embrace the 21st century.

Thank you Lord Foster, for your brilliant ideas.

BBC protected celebrity Savile

WHEN considering the case of the BBC Newsnight programme's investigation into the Jimmy Savile allegations, I could not help but think that if they had been investigating a Catholic priest or indeed any kind of clergyman, there would be no way they would have dropped it if the case was as strong as against Savile.

This is not to play down the crimes of priests or anybody else, but it seems that the BBC as a collective body at best didn't want to believe the allegations against Savile because he had worked for them; and at worst, subconsciously were less bothered by the alleged abuse because it had been committed by a celebrity, rather than a clergyman, politician or even an ordinary member of the public.

Some people might consider this paranoid, but I suspect that many people will share my view.

Small charities need help too

WHILE it is sad to read the Cats Protection has had to close its doors to new arrivals because it is so "overwhelmed"

(KoS, October 21), I wonder if anyone pays any attention to the plight of countless small animal rescues working out of people's homes all over the country?

Cats in Crisis has been caring for up to 150 cats and kittens throughout the summer, in a variety of garden sheds, spare bedrooms, bathrooms, airing cupboards, converted garages, and the like.

We don't have the benefit of a well-known name, or of extensive fundraising potential. We don't have nice charity shops, a proper sanctuary or dedicated vehicles. Everyone works long hours, is unpaid and worn out.

Every month our expenditure exceeds income and we have to subsidise the bills from our own pensions and wages. In addition, we are increasingly being asked to help pay vets' bills for owners struggling to meet the astronomical costs of major treatments such as road accidents, dentals, etc and are turning more and more people down because we cannot meet our own costs, let alone theirs.

So please spare a thought, and perhaps a couple of quid for us small guys.

Anyone able to offer a cat a new home can contact us on 07796 633306 or visit our website catsincrisisthanet.wordpress.com to learn more.

PCC vote will be too political

UNLIKE June Moore of Rushall (Letters, October 21) I shall not be voting for any Police and Crime Commissioner candidate standing on a political ticket and if I don't receive any information from independent candidates, so that I can make an informed judgment, I shall not be voting at all.

I believe the outcome of the process has the prospect of 'politicising' the police, and candidates representing political parties should not be allowed. The only information for the Kent commissioner post that I have so far received has been from the candidate for the Conservative Party.

This is hardly surprising, as a potential independent candidate for another area withdrew his application, because he said the process was so weighted in favour of the political parties' candidates that it would be almost impossible for an independent candidate to generate sufficient support to win.

I believe that when it's over the results will show in possibly all 41 police areas where elections are being held, that a candidate representing a political party has been elected.

For example, in the Humber-side police area, the former Labour Deputy Prime Minister, John Prescott, is standing and has already launched his election manifesto. Being the most high-profile candidate standing there, who would bet against him being elected?

How, in these times of economic austerity, the Government could sanction such a profligate waste of public money on this political gimmick, just beggars belief.

Put on right footing to find lost pension cash

Q I SHALL reach 60 in November. Thirty years ago, I worked for a chain of shoe shops for about five years and made contributions to its pension scheme.

I left and moved away, and I believe the company was taken over or closed down. Is there any way to trace my pension money?

A BECAUSE lots of people have lost touch with their pension savings over the years, the government set up the Pension Tracing Service (0845 600 2537).

It has files on thousands of old pension schemes and should be able to find yours and tell you how to claim.

Q MY pension is linked to inflation, and the July figures show prices are 2.6pc higher. However, nothing I buy or see advertised seems to be just 2.6pc more expensive. What about the big price rises in things such as gas and electric that seemed to come in two or three years ago? Those price rises are still there.

A INFLATION is measured on a year-to-year price changes in a basket of goods and services. Price rises that happened more than a year ago drop out of the picture. They have already been included in the figures that affected whatever pension increase you got last year.

The July figure largely reflected a fall in petrol prices, which typically fell from more than 140p a litre a few months ago to about 137p a litre.

This was still a rise on a year ago, but enough to hold the overall inflation rate at 2.6pc – half the peak of 5.2pc seen in September 2011.

Q I HAVE just read a magazine article that says that there is a tax band of only 10pc for savings income up to £2,710. I wonder how many people know about this?

A THE special tax band for income such as bank or building society interest is not straightforward.

The normal situation for most people is that they have a personal tax allowance of £8,105. This is the amount of income they can have this year before tax is due. Above this, tax starts at 20pc.

Now, you might think that if you have savings income of less than £2,710, it will be taxed only at 10pc. It is not quite this simple, though. If you have non-savings income such as pay or pensions that use up your tax-free £8,105 allowance, and then leave more than £2,710 on top, you do not qualify for the lower 10pc rate at all.

The only people who will get the lower rate are those who have little or no other income, yet do have savings invested.

TONY HETHERINGTON

Q I THINK I am correct in saying that if you manage to get a job at age 18, then this is when you start paying national insurance contributions. But what of those who go to university and graduate three years later? If they do not get a job until they are 21, do they lose three years' state pension rights?

A WHETHER or not someone has to pay national insurance contributions depends on their age and their earnings. The earnings limit changes frequently.

At present, anyone whose weekly earnings top £146 has to pay. But the starting age has not changed – and it is 16, not 18. So, does going to university until you are 21 mean that you miss out on five years of state pension rights?

Happily, the answer is no, it doesn't.

Until a couple of years ago, men needed 44 years of contributions to qualify for a full pension. Women needed 39 years. Particularly for men, this did make it a close thing.

If you left university at 21 and retired at 65, you would probably fall just short of the necessary 44 years unless you made a voluntary top-up payment. From 2010, though, both men and women can claim a full state pension after just 30 years of contributions.

Q I HAVE a pension plan and I would like to know if I can take all the money out before I am 65. I will soon be 59 and am unemployed.

A YOU can draw your pension now, but you cannot simply take the whole of the plan proceeds as a lump sum.

You can do this only once you have reached 60, and then only if the amount is trivial. You would need to check with the company that provides the plan, but it is likely that it will fall under government rules saying you can take the cash only if it is under £2,000.

Equality of the sexes a high price to pay for all

You need to act now to benefit from lower insurance premiums ahead of new EU law. ADAM AIKEN reports

THERE are only about 60 days until new EU rules on insurance premiums kick in, with the possibility that millions of people will be charged more even though their individual circumstances will not have changed.

A directive banning insurers from taking your gender into account when calculating premiums comes into force just before Christmas, with likely implications for both sexes.

It may be the difference between existing prices for men and women will be levelled out, creating as many winners as losers. But what is certain is many people who currently enjoy competitive products by dint of their gender will find themselves paying more – or receiving less.

The European Court of Justice (ECJ) made the ruling in March last year to a cacophony of complaints, with insurers making the point it was accepted practice to take into account all kinds of risk factors when calculating premiums.

But the protests fell on deaf ears, and the gender directive will come into force on December 21.

It will affect all sorts of insurance policies, including life insurance, motor insurance and pensions.

LIFE INSURANCE

The price difference between genders seems to have been maintained in the run-up to December, with women still able to buy much cheaper life insurance premiums.

But experts are warning women need to get their skates on if they want to continue to benefit from these discounts. Statistically, women live longer than men, so they have traditionally have paid less for life.

Matt Lloyd, at Confused.com, said: "How much you pay for life insurance at the moment is based on a number of factors specific to you: such as your age, your health and your sex. However, the EU [legislation] will prevent insurers from taking gender into account when they provide you with a price."

Money-minder.com, a life and protection comparison website, said women planning to take out life insurance in the next few months should consider arranging at least some of their cover early so they can lock in at the lower pricing before insurers are forced to equalise the premiums between both sexes.

Simply having made an application for cover by the cut-off date of December 21 might not be sufficient. Many insurers will require applicants to be fully underwritten and to have accepted terms by then, rather than having just applied.

"The fact is it can take three or four weeks to go through full underwriting if the insurer requires you to have a medical examination or needs extra information from your doctor, so women should have their applications well under way in November in order to lock in at these lower prices before December 21," said Money-minder's Ray Black.

"Whatever premium you agree now, if it's a guaranteed premium and you've been underwritten and accepted by the insurer, you'll pay that premium throughout the entire term of the policy, and the saving over a 20 or 25-year term could be thousands of pounds."

MOTOR INSURANCE

Tiger.co.uk, a price-comparison site that monitors the market on a monthly basis, said recently that motor insurance premiums had fallen to a two-year low, with a drop of 8pc over the past six months. But the price difference for men and women remains for now, with research by Moneysupermarket.com – another price-comparison service – finding that a man pays £111 a year more on average than a woman does.

"Gender has always been a critical differentiator when pricing insurance premiums, with male motorists across the board bearing the brunt of a 'boy racer' reputation," said Kevin Pratt, an insurance expert at Money-supermarket.

"The ECJ ruling will mean insurers re-evaluate the way in which they set their prices. Premiums for female drivers are particularly competitive at the moment, so anyone whose insurance is coming up for renewal this autumn should make the most of the situation by shopping around now and securing a good deal."

Scott Kelly, at Gocompare.com, said women drivers could face premium increases of between £300 and £2,000.

"The introduction of unisex rates is likely to have a sudden and dramatic impact, as insurers seem to be holding off until the last minute," he said.

PENSIONS

People looking to buy annuities will be well aware of the poor deals on offer at the moment.

Rising life expectancy and low returns on investments mean that annuity rates – the 'income for life' people buy with the money they have saved during their careers – are nearer 6pc than the 16pc they were in the 1990s. (An annuity rate of 6pc means you get £6,000 a year income for every £100,000 you have saved.)

But things could get even worse for many people approaching retirement, because the EU's 'gender-neutral' rules will also apply to annuities.

After all, annuities are sold by insurance companies, which base their payments on their best guess of your life expectancy. It is a sort of insurance policy in reverse, and therefore subject to the EU directive.

Because women live longer than men, insurers can afford to pay men a little more each month at the moment, as they are likely to be claiming their pensions for a shorter period. That means it will be men who will lose out from December 21.

Scott Mullen, of My Pension Expert, said: "With rates at historic lows anyway, male retirees should get a move on with their annuity purchases, and try to get them bought prior to the rates changing."

Business Week

Your business is our business

Creative Foundation provides inspiration

In recent years, news on the business front has often been of the downbeat variety. But this week we are happy to report that the cultural regeneration of Folkestone has been hailed as a blueprint for further development in the east of the county, while the north is in line for a funding boost. So it seems the Government and investors alike appreciate that Kent's business community has remained positive and forward-thinking even during the worst days of the economic downturn. Maybe, just maybe, things are turning round, reports Nick Ames.

THE arts-led regeneration of Folkestone has been held up as a model of what can be achieved in those areas of east Kent earmarked for economic revival.

Shepway, Thanet, Dover and Canterbury will receive cash from the Government's Regional Growth Fund – which is offering £30 million in loans to businesses that want to expand in the areas or move there and £5 million for improvements in transport infrastructure.

Its aim is to create 5,000 jobs and runs alongside the Grow For It campaign, which is aimed at marketing east Kent to the world. It is administered by Kent County Council with the object of boosting the economic prospects of an area that was badly hit by the loss of more than 1,000 jobs when the Pfizer plant closed.

And the changing fortunes of some of Folkestone's most deprived areas can act as a catalyst and inspiration for neighbouring towns, says politician Damian Collins.

The Folkestone and Hythe MP paid a visit to the regeneration project run under the auspices of the Creative Foundation, which backs arts-related businesses by renovating properties, providing business back-up and charging affordable rents.

Its guiding light is businessman and philanthropist Roger de Haan, who sold the Saga holiday company, which was founded by his father.

"Grow For It is important as it is the first time we have seen a dedicated campaign promoting east Kent as a place to do business," said Collins.

"But you have to bang a drum and let people know it's there – especially business people who might be looking to move into the area from elsewhere – and Folkestone shows what can be achieved.

"As well as its arts-related businesses, the town has attracted companies involved in such things as animation and it could be a real hub for those working in digital media, in such things as video-gaming."

LIGHT AT THE END OF THE TUNNEL: The Old High Street is emerging from gloom

The Creative Foundation is based in an area that was previously the most neglected and run-down part of the once-fashionable seaside resort.

It has so far restored 90 buildings and has an 84 per cent occupancy rate for its properties. Since November 2011 it has seen a 14 per cent increase in rental income.

Its ethos fits perfectly with Grow For It, which wants to promote industries involved in green technologies, tourism and scientific research.

Andrew Park is director and founder of Cognitive Media, an animation and design company that works mainly on business presentations.

He feels the Creative Foundation project shows how companies associated more with fashionable parts of London can benefit by relocating to places not normally on the 'trendy' radar.

"Folkestone is a burgeoning place for creative businesses," he said. "I started on my own five years ago and now there are 10 people working here. I could not have done that working in London merely because of the costs of the overheads.

"I've met some really talented people here – editors, writers and the like – and our ethos is to employ locally so that the town and its people all benefit.

"As we expand we want to attract prop-builders, set-designers and camera operators. We even have plans to create an animation school."

Among the companies to have made a success of a move to Folkestone is Arc Creative Design, which supplies information panels to tourist and heritage attractions across the UK.

The company is made up of a number of people who each worked from home but banded together to open an office along the town's Tontine Street, which, along with The Old High Street is the hub of Creative Foundation activities.

A few months after moving in, it landed a £120,000 contract with Natural England, which will rise to £192,000 over two years. According to

Pictures: PAUL JERRATT

BLUEPRINT: Alistair Upton is still excited about Folkestone's regeneration efforts the directors, acquiring the office "made sure the business was taken far more seriously".

One of the centrepieces of the regeneration project is Quarterhouse – home to comedy and music performances – while the Triennial arts festival and book festival both attract leading names.

Another big success is Rocksalt, a restaurant along the quayside with stunning views across the harbour. One of the most talked-about new eateries in England, it is run by Mark Sargeant, who is a former head chef at Gordon Ramsay's Michelin-starred restaurant at Claridge's, which specialises in local produce.

Two of the major attractions for companies looking to invest in east Kent are its communications and property prices. Creative Foundation-backed businesses say rents are about a quarter of those charged in places such as Shoreditch, which is one of London's emerging growth points for arts, culture and media.

Lower house prices and immediate access to the countryside and beaches are also attractive, especially to professionals with young families, while journey times from Folkestone to central London are less than an hour on the high-speed train. Part of the money available to promote east Kent growth is to be used to speed up journeys between Thanet and London.

Alistair Upton is CEO of the Creative Foundation and thinks Folkestone provides a blueprint for regeneration.

"There is a whole level of energy and excitement at this point in its development," he said. "Folkestone represents great value for money on both a personal and corporate level."

The overall investment drive for east Kent will run over three years and county council leader Paul Carter said the campaign would "wake up the world" to the area's potential.

"East Kent is unique and has vast potential to grow its economy," he said.

Is £20 million cash injection the answer for north Kent?

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

BUSINESSES in the Thames Gateway are in line to receive £20 million to support new investment and jobs in Dartford, Gravesham, Medway and Swale.

Ministers announced that Tiger – or Thames Gateway Innovation, Growth and Enterprise – is one of 130 schemes nationally to receive money from the Government's £2.4 billion Regional Growth Fund.

The scheme is set to be up and running by April next year. It will offer low-interest loans to businesses investing in new products and services that will create long-term job opportunities; it has the aim of unlocking additional private-sector funding.

There have been two previous rounds of RGF funding in the county. A total of £35m was made available for Expansion East Kent, which will assist in business growth and job creation. Also, £5m has been allocated for rail improvements between Ashford and Ramsgate.

Paul Carter, leader of Kent County Council, said: "Tiger is a great opportunity for businesses with the appetite for investment and growth. Business will be the backbone of north Kent's economic recovery – and Tiger will help to unlock its potential."

NEW FUNDING OPTION: Sheerness is one of the areas that could benefit from the potential investment cash

The new scheme has been secured after a bid to the Regional Growth Fund by the Thames Gateway Kent Partnership, with the support of local businesses.

The news has been greeted with a show of confidence in the area and council leaders say it will be a huge boost to both investment and job creation.

Rob Bennett, chairman of Thames Gateway Kent Partnership, said: "Government backing for Tiger is a huge vote of confidence in the Thames Gateway – one of the UK's most important economic-growth areas. Coming on top of recent investment in transport and infrastructure, it's another reason the Gateway is a great place to set up and grow a business."

As well as the Kent side of the Thames, the fund will also be available to businesses in Thurrock, Essex. It is also the latest example of money to boost business opportunities in Medway and Swale.

Andrew Bowles, leader of Swale Borough Council, said: "Swale is a great place to invest or to expand an existing business. This fund is brilliant news and will offer financial help to businesses that want to take advantage of our excellent location, facilities and workforce."

Rodney Chambers, leader of Medway Council, had a similar message: "This is a significant endorsement from the Government of our approach to regeneration and it clearly shows we continue to be a place where businesses are welcome and can grow with confidence."

"We look forward to working across north Kent to help as many businesses as possible benefit from this funding so that it creates more jobs in the shortest possible time."

Work is under way to determine the details of how the scheme will operate and how businesses will be able to apply.

HOME-BUYING PROCESS

Award proves commitment to standards

GIRLINGS Solicitors has secured membership of the Law Society's Conveyancing Quality Scheme – the mark of excellence for the home-buying process.

Law Society president Lucy Scott-Moncrieff said that the Law Society introduced CQS to promote high standards in the world of home-buying.

It has established itself as the quality mark of the home-buying sector and enables consumers to identify practices that provide a quality residential conveyancing service.

Ian Burrow, head of the Girlings residential conveyancing department, said: "Girlings is delighted to have secured CQS status."

"Buying and selling a home can be a stressful time. Choosing a solicitor to help in that process just got easier. By looking for a CQS firm like Girlings Solicitors, the public can seek out a firm that has proved its commitment to quality."

"The overall beneficiaries will be clients who use Girlings Solicitors when buying a home. They will receive a reliable, efficient service as recognised by the CQS standard."

The scheme requires practices to undergo a strict assessment, compulsory training, self-reporting, random audits and annual reviews to maintain CQS status.

The new saw that will help group exploit last source of quality rag

A £100,000 investment in a precision saw at a Kent quarry will enable it to exploit the last remaining source of high-quality Kentish ragstone.

The specialist saw installed at Hermitage Quarry, near Maidstone, will allow operators to cut stone on site to specified sizes for stonemasons.

With a three-metre diameter blade, the Van Voorden Apollo 6 primary saw has been installed by Gallagher Group and enables the company to offer 'sawn six-sided' and 'dimensional slab' Kentish ragstone.

After cutting the ragstone to the specified sizes, any off-cuts of stone are recycled and crushed.

The high-quality stone has been used for construction since Roman times. It is still used in the conservation and restoration of churches, historic buildings and bridges and in the construction of new structures such as homes, supermarkets and walls in conservation areas.

Nick Yandle, chief executive of Gallagher Group, a building, civil engineering, aggregates and property-development company, said: "We are now the only source of quality Kentish ragstone. Undertaking the primary sawing on site reduces transport costs, cuts down waste management at the stonemasons' works and enables the off-cuts to be recycled into aggregate."

"This helps reduce the cost of building stone and provide a more comprehensive service to our customers while also boosting our environmental performance."

"Kentish ragstone has been used for more than 2,000 years as an attractive and functional building stone for many buildings across London and the South East. There is still a continuing and strong demand for the stone."

Driving school is launched by MidKent College

OFFICIALS say that a new driving school offering lessons at £17 per hour is going down a storm with staff and students at MidKent College.

Officially launched last week, the college says the new venture aims to help learner motorists struggling to overcome rising fuel and insurance costs to get behind the wheel.

Two cars carrying the MidKent College Driving School logo – a Ford Focus and Hyundai i10 – were parked outside the Medway Campus for the launch event while instructors handed out fliers to staff and students.

The Maidstone Campus launch took place this week.

Programme administrator Matt Brown said: "It's very expensive to run a vehicle these days so it's no surprise our super-value lessons are attracting such a great deal of interest.

"We handed out hundreds of fliers and have received lots of expressions of interest already, so we're confident this new venture will be a great success.

"We want people to continue to enjoy coming to college, which is why it is such a high priority to find new ways to improve the student experience."

Non-staff and students can also sign up to lessons through MidKent College Driving School, but at the higher price of £21 per hour.

The new business has been set up in partnership with Medway-based TopClass, whose instructors will carry out the training.

TopClass manager Tim Hunt said: "We're delighted to be working with MidKent College on this exciting new venture.

"It's fantastic that the students will benefit in this way and be taught the correct, safest way to drive on our roads."

Forklift training is a female first for apprentice Alex

SIXTEEN-year-old Alex Blake from Hoo, near Rochester, has got her career off to a flying start as the only female apprenticeship at material handling company, Linde.

Alex was one of 18 new recruits selected from across the UK to join the company to begin training as a forklift truck engineer. She will be employed by Linde MH South East Ltd and be based at its site at the Port of Sheerness.

She beat off competition from 100 applicants and now works at Linde, with a day each week and block release at MidKent College.

Linde introduced the Fork Lift Truck Association approved apprenticeship scheme in 2011 as part of an industry push towards attracting younger people into the industry.

Alex joins Linde's second intake of apprentices and she will become a fully qualified forklift truck engineer at the end of the course. Alex is the only female to join the company as an apprentice.

Speaking about her apprenticeship, Alex said: "I wanted to join the apprenticeship scheme to learn about forklift trucks and learn new things. Eventually I'd like to become a qualified mechanic or engineer so this is a great start for me."

The programme consists of providing vocational and technical related training for the apprentices with a focus on commercial awareness.

£1m to help people find a job and stay in work

A £1 million investment in jobs and more apprenticeship opportunities for people in Medway have been announced by the council.

Medway Council has launched a project that will see £1m invested in helping long-term unemployed people hold down jobs in Medway over the next three years.

The European project, IM-PRESS, is funded by the European Regional Development Fund and cash from central government, and helps people who have found a job, stay in work.

This includes one-to-one job coaches and access to NVQ training to help with career progression.

Medway Council's portfolio holder for strategic development and economic growth, Cllr Jane Chitty, also announced a further commitment to apprentices in Medway, with plans to subsidise 20 apprenticeships in partnership with Jobcentre Plus in the next three months.

The council will team up with Jobcentre Plus to offer 20 people, who have been unemployed for between three to nine months, an apprenticeship.

Cllr Chitty said: "We have once again managed to lever in a significant amount of money to plough back into our economy here in Medway, to help hundreds of people not only find work, but also stay in work.

"We already have a range of successful measures to help people find work or training and what's crucial about this new project is it means we are doing what we can to sustain this – helping people find jobs that they can develop in as professionals."

Partnership manager for Medway

Jobcentre Plus Sue Harrison said: "This new partnership between the council and Jobcentre Plus to give jobseekers the chance to train through an apprenticeship will not only entice businesses, with the potential of a subsidy, but also help more people take their first steps to a future career."

University says graduate interns will be a business boost for companies

BUSINESSES in Kent and Medway are set to benefit from a new internship programme being launched at the University of Greenwich.

The programme, aimed primarily at small and medium-sized companies, will match employers with recent graduates for a four-week, full-time internship.

Graduates will have the skills to work on short projects in, for example, market research, marketing, social media, strategy and data analysis.

They will also take part in a series of intensive training days at the university, covering presentation and communication skills, to prepare them for their roles and make sure both parties get the most out of the placement.

Jerry Allen from the university's Business School, who is leading the Graduate Internship scheme, says: "Many employers like to 'try before they buy' and this is a perfect way for graduates to put themselves in the shop window. At the same time, we are boosting the economy by offering an injection of graduate level skills to businesses, so we're giving something back to the community as well.

"The internship scheme will also be helping our graduates gain a vital advantage in the jobs market, at a time when getting on the first rung of the ladder has rarely been more difficult.

"It should prove to be a win-win situation for employers and graduates alike.

"In an immensely competitive job market, the experience our graduates will have during their internships could make all the difference when it comes to landing that all-important first position.

"They will be developing their commercial awareness and acumen in a real business environment, undertaking strategic, and often demanding, work that will require them to complete tasks in a tight timeframe.

"The experience will enhance their CVs and also their personal and business skills."

The University of Greenwich's campuses include the shared Medway campus at Chatham Maritime, which trains students in science, engineering, technology, healthcare and business programmes.

The graduate internship scheme is open to all Greenwich graduates.

Businesses taking part will include those in the IT, software, security, training and voluntary sectors, and direct approaches from firms are welcome.

Mr Allen added: "A high-quality internship will distinguish those taking part from other graduates, and give them a priceless insight into how a business operates in the real world.

"We know that employers really value this, and this experience will make our graduates stand out."

The internships will start in early January next year.

EastEnders masterclass for would-be TV directors

AN acting masterclass by an EastEnders director has been a major success for media students.

It was run by TV director Steve Finn, who is usually found working in Albert Square. He even blew up the Sun Hill police station.

He ran the session for students at the University for the Creative Arts to give them a taste of what would be expected from them in the real world of acting.

Mr Finn has worked on some of Britain's most famous and established shows, and is keen to keep the supply of employable young actors going so he agreed to help the first year broadcast media students at the Maidstone TV Studios where the course is based.

Over his 30-year career, Mr Finn has directed hundreds of episodes of Casualty, Holby City, Brookside and The Bill, where he famously blew up Sun Hill police station, but he is best-known for his work on EastEnders which he has directed for the past 13 years.

His masterclass focused on how to get a performance out of every kind of actor and how scenes can be directed in different ways.

He said: "Coming here and teaching these very keen students the art of directing actors has been a great experience for me. Having a course based in working studios like this is a great starting point for their careers in the industry."

Student Neil Morris was delighted to take part. He said: "Having first-hand tuition from a working professional like Steve is just brilliant. He's doing the job I want, so to hear from him personally has been mind blowing."

And Simon Welsford, senior lecturer for broadcast media, added: "Having a director of Steve's calibre and experience come into our course is a great coup and again highlights the unique industry links that our course has."

"The students really benefited from his unique industry insight and learned a great deal. They, of course, also loved hearing all of the stories Steve had from the EastEnders set."

Music classes as easy as ABC

YOUNG children are pioneering an award-winning, innovative and new music programme introduced by Kent Music.

Kindermusik International's ABC Music & Me curriculum helps children of all ages progress in and out of school by developing literacy, language, cognitive, physical, social and emotional development.

Education charity Kent Music started running the Kindermusik Pilot for Early Years Foundation Stage in schools across Kent in September.

Kent Music chief executive Peter Bolton said: "ABC Music & Me is designed in such a way that it enhances children's development in all areas of learning."

"It also gives teachers and parents the resources to support this learning inside and outside of school."

Teachers who want to know more about the Kindermusik Pilot, or to arrange a meeting or workshop in a school, can contact Felicity Vinall on 01622 358422 or email fvinall@kent-music.com.

Students use human rights project to prepare for their English GCSE exams

YEAR 9 English students at the Folkestone Academy have been using the work of Amnesty International as a background for GCSE English exam preparation.

In a bid to find new ways to engage with all forms of writing, reading, speaking and listening, students have been exploring the complex subject of human rights.

Pupils were given the opportunity to set up their own Academy Amnesty Student Group to raise awareness of the human rights campaign within the academy.

Their first activity was to lead a school assembly to highlight human rights issues and the work that Amnesty do. Following on from this they were interviewed on community radio station 105.9 Academy FM Folkestone.

Michelle Hill, English teacher and organiser of the Academy Amnesty Student Group, said: "With Year 9 English students we like to expand their knowledge of worldwide issues, while helping them to learn skills essential to their English GCSE course."

"I encourage the student group to consider how they can support causes they feel strongly about through writing letters, designing posters and organising protests and fundraising events."

Students also visited Age UK in Folkestone to talk with clients about the Amnesty International posters they had created during English lessons, and more generally about their work on human rights.

English teacher Lorna Kenny said: "It was lovely to see our students interacting so enthusiastically with the older men and women in the centre. I am very proud of them."

ST LAWRENCE COLLEGE, RAMSGATE

Top facilities available with scholarships

THE anxious wait is finally over for those families whose children sat the 11+ Kent Test.

The results are now known and if you have a child currently studying in Year 6, whether they have passed the 11+ or not, there is another option open to you. Have you considered looking at St Lawrence College in Ramsgate for the next stage of your child's education?

Year 6 pupils are welcome to sit the school's forthcoming scholarship tests for entry into Year 7 in September 2013.

The scholarship tests take place on Thursday, November 22, when candidates are invited to spend the day at St Lawrence College.

Depending upon the results, up to 50 per cent off the fees could be awarded. Scholarships are offered for academic, all-rounder, sports and musical disciplines, so whatever your child's strength, there is something to suit.

St Lawrence College was given a glowing report by inspectors from the Independent Schools Inspectorate at the end of last year and they confirmed that "the quality of the teaching throughout the school is excellent" and "the quality of the pupils' personal development is outstanding".

The school was commended for the range of subjects offered and the breadth of extra-curricular activities available. The extensive school grounds contain outstanding sporting facilities, including an indoor heated swimming pool and a new sports centre housing badminton courts, squash courts, an indoor climbing wall, cricket nets and even state-of-the-art fitness room and dance studio.

September this year saw the opening of a stunning 500-seat in-school theatre to further enhance the school's vibrant dramatic arts and music departments.

If you want to know more about the scholarships available or would like an informal discussion or a visit to St Lawrence College, please phone Alison Hall on 01843 572931 or email her at ah@slcuk.com.

NEW OPENING: Try Explore Learning in Kent

EXPLORE LEARNING, SOUTHBOROUGH

Boost confidence and skills before exams

PREPARING for the 11+ can be a tricky time for parents who may be unsure about where to turn for help and advice.

Well, parents in Kent now have another option from which to choose as Explore Learning, the popular provider of English and maths tuition for children aged five to 14, has this month opened its new centre in Southborough, near Tunbridge Wells. This is its 66th centre to open nationwide, and the second to open in the county, complementing its Sainsbury's-based centre in Ashford.

Southborough centre director Sarah Stenning said: "We're thrilled to open our new centre in Southborough and at such a central location where parents can drop in their children at a time that suits them, whether it be after school or at weekends.

"Parents love it not only because they see an improvement in their children's maths and English but also because it encourages them to have fun while learning."

Explore Learning is currently running comprehensive 11+ and entrance-exam courses for youngsters preparing to take their exams next year.

The workshops are taught in small groups once a week and focus on improving verbal and non-verbal reasoning skills as well as their numeracy and literacy, which comes as standard in all Explore Learning classes.

Tutors take a fun and relaxed approach to teaching, with each lesson including games and activities that help to boost a child's confidence while eliminating anxiety ahead of the exams.

The Explore Learning tutors take the utmost care to ensure that the pupils are ready to tackle the exams with confidence.

For more information, phone the Southborough centre on 01892 731932, email southborough@explorellearning.co.uk or visit www.explorellearning.co.uk.

KING'S ROCHESTER

Scholarships launched to celebrate new sports centre

KING'S Rochester Preparatory School will be holding an assessment morning on Saturday, November 10, for entry to Year 7 in September 2013.

Papers will be set in English, mathematics and non-verbal reasoning, while there will be consideration of all-round interests and talents, including sport and music.

Academic, music and sports scholarships may be awarded to suitable applicants.

King's Rochester has a number of exciting projects outlined for the academic year ahead.

From the beginning of September, Saturday lessons ceased at the school, with the working week being restructured to increase the amount of teaching time while fitting into five days, this being more appropriate to modern family life while maintaining the Saturday sporting programme and

LINED UP:

Pupils can look forward to a range of new projects in the academic year ahead enabling more activities for boarders.

King's is also in the process of establishing a web-based careers network for current and former pupils to help King's pupils stand out to potential employers in the future.

Having recently acquired Stirling Sports Centre from Medway Council, King's will be refurbishing the facilities to provide some of the best school sporting facilities in the South East.

King's Rochester Sports Centre will have nine new outdoor tennis and netball courts, indoor hockey/badminton/cricket nets, changing rooms, a fitness suite and physio facilities as well as a bar and viewing area. The centre will also be open to the public. Olympic-standard astroturfs are also available to pupils at the adjoining Holcombe Hockey Club.

To celebrate this acquisition, King's is offering up to five sports scholarships for 11+, 13+ and 16+ entry in September 2013. Application forms are available from the registrar, Lynne Davies (phone 01634 888590, email admissions@kings-rochester.co.uk).

WRITE ON: Exciting times for children at school

THE 2012 KENT AND MEDWAY TEST RESULTS

The results are in... but no need to panic

AFTER an anxious wait for parents and children alike, the 11+ results were revealed last week.

For the Kent Test, 5,370 children were found suitable for grammar school out of the 11,451 that sat the test – a 45 per cent success rate.

A total of 1,298 of the successful youngsters live outside the county – a figure similar to recent years and a key factor in pressure on places in the west of county.

This 5,370 will now hope to secure one of 4,545 grammar-school places in Kent for September 2013, meaning 825 will miss out.

For the Medway Test, 2,078 children sat the exams, including those from outside the area, with 923 found suitable for grammar school.

There are 926 selective places available in Medway.

It is now time for parents of children in Year 6 moving up to secondary schools in September 2013 to apply to their local authority, stating their preferred school choices. Those in Kent can list four schools and in Medway, six.

Mike Whiting, county council cabinet member for education, learning and skills, said: "This can be an exciting and challenging time for children and families. I would encourage any families who haven't yet decided which school to apply for, to talk to the primary head-teachers about which schools would be best suited to meeting their child's future educational needs and then visit the secondary schools they are most interested in before applying."

Eight secondaries in Kent are deemed 'super-selective', whereby they can give priority to children who scored the highest marks in the Kent or Medway Test.

They include Skinners School in Tunbridge Wells, The Judd School in Tonbridge, Tonbridge Grammar School, Rochester Grammar School, Rainham Mark Grammar in Gillingham, Dartford Grammar School for Girls and Simon Langton for Boys in Canterbury.

Career opportunities at MidKent CollegeTeaching & Learning Manager for Foundation Learning, ESOL and Additional Learning Support

Come and join the team at one of the largest and most successful further and higher education colleges in the South East.

With state-of-the-art campuses in Medway and Maidstone and strong financial health, we are passionate about teaching, learning and the development of our staff.

We are in the final stages of putting together a new team of Teaching & Learning Managers to drive forward a flexible, engaging and enterprising curriculum.

MidKent College has achieved its best ever success rates and is looking for a talented, self-motivated teaching professional with a strong desire to take us to the next level.

The department consists of:

- A Foundation Learning Department that supports students who have specific learning difficulties and/or disabilities or who have been out of education for a variety of reasons.
- An ESOL department.
- An Additional Learning Support team who offer various levels of support to students across college.

The successful applicant will earn a basic salary of £38,169 and can look forward to 35 days annual leave, eligibility to join the teachers' pension scheme and other benefits. If you have a track record of delivering high quality teaching and learning in a relevant specialism, with the skills and ambition to manage a curriculum area successfully and to lead your team to deliver outstanding teaching, learning and assessment, we would welcome your application.

Contact the College to request an application pack or an informal discussion with the relevant Head of Faculty.

AND CONSERVATION AREAS) ACT 1990

KCC/TW/0151/2012 - Proposed development at Land south of Rolvenden Road, Benenden, Kent, TN17 4DN.

I give notice that further information has been received amending and amplifying application
KCC/TW/0151/2012 submitted to the Kent County Council (as the County Planning Authority) for planning permission for the erection of new Primary School building with associated hardcourt play areas, access, parking and landscaping and re-profiling and landscaping of residual land to return to pasture. The further information includes:

- a. a reduction in the number of car parking spaces proposed within the new school car park by 22% (from 67 to 52) and an increase in landscape planting provisions;
- b. an amended proposed diversion route for footpath WC327; and
- c. additional supporting justification covering the applicant's site selection process.

The proposed development (as amended and amplified) does not accord with the provisions of the Development Plan in force in the area in which the land to which the application relates is situated. The proposed development (as amended and amplified) is close to the Benenden Conservation Area and is likely to affect its character and/or appearance. It may also affect the setting of nearby Listed Buildings. The proposed development (as amended and amplified) affects three public rights of way (WC325, WC326 and

NOTICE OF THE MAKING OF AN ORDER TO TEMPORARILY CLOSE RESTRICTED BYWAY ZSX84 IN THE PARISH OF SHEERNESS

RESTRICTED BYWAY ZSX84, SHEERNESS (PROHIBITION OF TRAFFIC) TEMPORARY ORDER 2012 ROAD TRAFFIC REGULATION ACT 1984, SECTION 14(1), AS AMENDED BY THE ROAD TRAFFIC (TEMPORARY RESTRICTIONS) ACT 1991

Kent County Council has temporarily closed Restricted Byway ZSX84 between The Fleet (NGR TQ 914 739) and the play area (NGR TQ 914 740) beneath the power cables from the 22nd October 2012.

The route will be closed for a maximum of six months, although it is expected that it will reopen before 5 November 2012.

The route is to be closed because works are planned on or near it and there is a likelihood of danger to users.

The alternative route is via a path around the north, east and south of the play area and will be signed for the duration of the closure.

THE KENT COUNTY COUNCIL

CYCLE TRACKS ACT 1984

WHITSTABLE - CONVERSION OF PUBLIC FOOTPATH CWX 19 (PART)

WHITSTABLE - CONVERSION OF PUBLIC FOOTPATH CWX 24

CYCLE TRACKS ORDERS 2012

In connection with the conversions of public footpaths CWX19 (part) and CWX24 to Cycle Track, the Kent County Council confirmed the above Orders on 18th October 2012. No objections were received.

The effect of the Cycle Tracks Orders are that the lengths of footpaths to which the Orders relates will become highways which, for the purpose of the Highways Act 1980, are highways maintainable at public expense and over which the public will have a right of way on pedal cycles (other than pedal cycles which are motor vehicles) and a right of way on foot.

The footpaths designated as cycle track by these Orders are as follows:

- | | |
|--------------|--|
| CWX19 (Part) | That width of that part of the public footpath from Reservoir Road to Cromwell Road for a distance of 87metres in a south westerly direction. A minimum of 2.7 metres width is recorded. |
| CWX 24 | That path known locally as Lanes Walk from Tower Parade to Westgate Terrace for a distance of 85 metres in a southerly direction. A width of 3 metres is recorded |

All directions general, all distances approximate.

A copy of the confirmed orders and the relevant maps can be inspected on Mondays to Fridays at Canterbury City Council, Military Road, Canterbury, Kent, CT1 1YW or alternatively on Tuesdays and Fridays at Whitstable Library, 31-33 Oxford St, Whitstable CT5 1DB. A copy of the Order and Map may be purchased there.

The Orders came into force on 18th October 2012, but if a person aggrieved by the Orders wants to question the validity, or that of any provision contained in it, on the ground that it is not within the powers of the Cycle Tracks Act 1984, or on the ground that any requirement of regulations made under subsection 4 of the Act, has not been complied with in relation to the Orders, he or she may under Section 6 of the Act, within 6 weeks from the 28th October 2012, make an application to the High Court.

THE INTERVIEW

Michael Paterson

WITH Daniel Craig's latest outing as James Bond now thrilling UK cinema audiences, author and historian Michael Paterson has taken an in-depth look at the world's most famous secret agent.

His book, Amazing & Extraordinary Facts: James Bond, has unearthed many intriguing details about the novels and films that feature 007 – the character created by Ian Fleming, who lived in St Margaret's Bay.

And there are some very Kentish connections to Bond.

"Fleming was a journalist by background," said Paterson. "He therefore had a certain ability to convey the essence of a place. He describes both Istanbul and Japan very effectively in his books, but he preferred to write about locations he knew and loved: France, the Alps, Jamaica, the USA – and Kent.

"He not only lived in the county but had his character grow up there and set an entire novel, Moonraker, near St Margaret's Bay.

"He was very patriotic and the Kent countryside is so typically English it's not surprising he developed great affection for it.

"It provided a number of things: the golf course at Sandwich, the Aylesford paper mill, the cliff-top setting for Sir Hugo Drax's rocket launch."

No other county features anything like as much in the Bond stories.

One favourite Kent Bond story is the inspiration for the agent's code number 007 – the same digits as a bus that runs from Dover to London.

"As far back as Elizabethan times, the 00 symbol – resembling a pair of eyes – on a document signified it was top secret. It meant 'For your eyes only'. A double-O prefix was used by the German intelligence service during World War One, and Fleming would have known this.

"His own service, British Naval Intelligence, sometimes used it, too. It was automatically associated in his mind with the highest secrecy.

"It will have struck him as ironic and amusing that, when driving

A lifelong Bond with Kent

A new book on Britain's most famous secret agent reveals his close ties to this county and how a bus route inspired that 007 code. Nick Ames investigates.

from London to Kent and back, he constantly passed on the road buses that bore this number.

"At some point it will have occurred to him it could work as an agent's code number. It was concise and memorable, and sounded mysterious.

"At the very least Fleming and his fans owe something to the bus company for having jogged his memory and providing inspiration."

Paterson says the movies are a constantly-evolving part of the character's whole mythology.

"The reinvention, or adaptation, of Bond over 50 years has been extremely successful – as we can see from box-office takings.

"Each time there is a new film, or a new actor, another generation of fans is created. The genre could not have survived if he had remained stuck in a time-war. People want him to be contemporary and they go to see the films expecting to be dazzled by ever-more sophisticated stunts and gadgets.

"The films are certainly of their time – who could forget Roger Moore's flared trousers, or those awful safari suits? Within a few years, not only the clothes but the hairstyles and cars and even the slang seem quaint, yet this does not matter because by that time they can be enjoyed for the nostalgia."

Paterson is keen to share the Bond lines he most enjoyed and also say who is his top man in the role.

"Among the most quoted phrases from the films is a certain throwaway remark of Goldfinger's, delivered by the affable Gert Frobe, who played him: 'Do you expect me to talk?' 'No, Mr Bond, I expect you to die'.

"I think, however, that undoubtedly the most famous line in the entire genre comes in Dr No when we first meet the character.

"The scene is the one in which he is asked his name at the roulette table and the camera pans upward, revealing his face as he says 'Bond, James Bond'. This is one of cinema's immortal moments. Sean Connery was without doubt an actor of ability and screen presence. As the man who 'made' the role he is generally, according to polls, seen as the best.

"I would agree, but then he was the James Bond of my generation.

"My editor, a woman younger than I am, regards Moore as the archetypal Bond and all others as mere imitations. I believe Timothy Dalton, a fine classical actor, was miscast and Pierce Brosnan was credible and extremely good.

"But Daniel Craig is a welcome addition to the list because in an age of cinematic realism he shows just how brutal the world of espionage can be and how unpleasant are those who do this type of job.

"That leaves George Lazenby, traditionally seen as the worst.

"I feel this is unfair. He gave a very good performance in On Her Majesty's Secret Service, handling a testing range of emotions and situations with surprising ability for someone with no acting training

"There is no reason the genre should not continue for a further 50 years and I believe there will still be Bond films a century from now.

"They have long since moved beyond the original novels and taken on a life of their own."

But has he heard, on radio, the first person to ever play Bond – Bob 'Blockbusters' Holness, who attended what used to be Ashford Grammar School?

"Sadly not. I know Bond works well on radio, and Holness was one of four actors to depict him in this medium.

"That was in 1956, when the character was still faithful to Fleming's original – more dour, more humourless and less self-assured than he later became.

"But good for Norton Knatchbull School that they've produced a 007. Bond belongs to Kent, despite having Scottish-Swiss parentage.

"I'm glad someone associated with the county has played him."

HALLOWEEN AND BONFIRE NIGHT

Festivities to enjoy on cold autumn nights

TWO big autumn celebrations take place over the next week or so – and both have their roots firmly in history!

Halloween (on Wednesday, October 31) is usually thought of as an American invention, but it is actually far older than that.

The name itself was first used in the 16th century and is a Scottish variant on the phrase All-Hallows'-Even, the day before the feast of All Hallows.

As befits its traditions of ghosts and witches, the day has pagan roots.

for the winter, feasts laid on and bonfires lit.

It was also considered to be a time when the spirits of the dead were thought to be able to visit their former haunts. They were actually invited to the festival, with places laid at the table for them to join in the celebrations, far back in the mists of time.

The practice of wearing costumes may have come about as a way of disguising a person to protect them from evil visitors from the spirit world.

Current popular traditions include trick-or-treating, bobbing for apples and telling spooky stories.

Halloween is becoming increasingly popular in the UK and has been a fixture on the US party calendar for years.

However, Guy Fawkes Night (on Monday, November 5) remains a uniquely British occasion.

It commemorates the Catholic Guy Fawkes's failed attempt to assassinate Protestant King James by blowing up The Houses of Parliament during the state opening in 1604.

He was discovered in the cellars beneath the buildings with a fuse and barrels of gunpowder and subsequently tried and executed.

The following November 5, Londoners were encouraged to light bonfires to celebrate the king's escape and the tradition grew, with fireworks becoming popular as well.

The idea of burning an effigy started a few years later; this was sometimes The Pope, or indeed Fawkes.

CELEBRATE! Both Halloween and Bonfire Night are popular family events for the autumn

Cosy idyll in the country that one day I might never leave

If there's a place to go on a rainy Sunday afternoon when your head's a bit fuzzy from the night before and you need a little tender loving care, then Five Bells Inn in East Brabourne is it.

Nestled at the foot of the North Downs, this stunning inn boasts old-world charm with a modern twist.

The warm, inviting interior, with its oak beams draped with hops, dozens of candles, vases of fresh flowers on big oak tables and a burning log fire, is so cosy that you run the risk of never wanting to leave.

And the menu – although a little difficult to read, perhaps because of its over-quirky design – promises fresh, local food, with a wine list boasting the best of Kent's own produce. You can even buy olives, home-made chutney and other delights on the menu to take home with you.

Despite the pub being quite busy and our not having booked a table, we were immediately invited to sit at a large oak table and handed menus to look over.

We ordered two glasses of the Chapel Down Flint white wine – made in Tenterden – some olives and bread with oil and balsamic vinegar.

RESTAURANT REVIEW

Scotch hens' eggs and duck-leg croquettes with celeriac purée. Each one was delicious and clearly made with fresh ingredients.

With the smell of wood smoke in our nostrils and our bellies slightly full from our starters, we chose our mains.

I decided on the fish cakes, packed full with haddock, salmon and prawns from local fishmonger Griggs of Hythe, mixed with leeks and celery and topped with oven-roasted potato mash, served with a garden salad. My guest chose the saddle of lamb, which came with mashed potato and vegetables.

Other tempting offers on the menu were the Bells beefy burger with crispy bacon, hot blue cheese and red cabbage coleslaw, and the tagliatelle with Mediterranean vegetables, home-made basil pesto, toasted pine nuts and Parmesan.

The dessert menu boasted a selection of sweet treats and old favourites as well as ice-creams. There was also the Kentish cheeseboard, with a selection of the county's best cheeses.

We ordered coffee and sat for a while, taking in the quirky mix of adornments filling the pub, from a huge mermaid statue to a small wooden pig on our table.

Although the service was slightly slow, the staff were friendly and in no way made us feel in a rush to leave, even though we sat for a while after our meal.

With its fresh local produce, cosy atmosphere and delicious food, this family-friendly pub, apparently only recently refurbished, is an absolute find – so good that I'm almost loath to share it.

The total bill came to £75.

Wood-fired pizza team heads back to Margate

MARGATE'S seafront will house a new restaurant that you may well have heard of.

The Great British Pizza Company, which operated a pop-up unit on the harbour arm during the summer, now has a permanent roof over its head.

After its success with the alfresco method on the beach, the team has taken up a position where it can fully demonstrate its skills with a wood-fired oven bringing pizza to the classic British seaside.

With an award-winning chef and a former food critic at the helm, the GBPC could make for a warm eatery on the cold winter nights, but don't worry... the pop-up shop will return in summer.

Good Pub Guide hails The Three Chimneys

THE Three Chimneys in Biddenden has been named Kent Dining Pub Of The Year by The Good Pub Guide.

The guide, which highlights the best from each county, named the eatery in Hareplaine Road as Kent's best overall because of its pub garden, cask ales, good food and snacks as well as its allowing four-legged friends into the bar.

It was described as having "pubby beamed rooms of considerable individuality, log fires, imaginative food and pretty garden".

The pub was also commended for serving Biddenden cider and apple juice.

Walking near the beaches The Stranglers

Leas Cliff Hall, Folkestone
Thursday, March 21, 2013
Tickets £24
www.atgtickets.com

IN 1977 The Stranglers released their extraordinary debut album Rattus Norvegicus and firmly established themselves as punk legends in the process.

During their career the group bagged 24 Top 40 singles across four decades, as well as 18 Top 40 albums, with hits including Peaches, No More Heroes, Always The Sun, Golden Brown, Strange Little Girl and Skin Deep.

The Stranglers' first album for six years, Giants, was released in March 2012. It was critically acclaimed and saw the band complete another hugely successful UK tour, quickly followed by 23 dates in Europe and festival slots, proving they still have raw pulling power.

Afrabeat by the seaside A mix of styles

Duke of Cumberland, Whitstable
Thursday, December 6
01227 280617

DECEMBER at Dukes in Whitstable sees critically-acclaimed New Yorker Joe Driscoll and West African star Sekou Kouyate bring their mixture of hip-hop, rock, and reggae to the seaside town.

This interesting duo, who are on the verge of releasing their first album together, offer an eclectic mix of very different styles that has been called Afrabeat.

To anyone who knows Driscoll's music, the familiar mix of rapping, folk and blues is recognisable yet very different, while Kouyate, originally from Conakry Guinea, has been compared to Jimi Hendrix because of his unique style of playing with various effects and in a variety of genres.

A very British comedy Three Men In A Boat

Theatre Royal Margate
Saturday, November 3
01843 292795
www.theatreroyalmargate.com

KEEPING audiences laughing for more than a century, Jerome K Jerome's classic tale of boating misadventure has long been celebrated as a great example of English humour.

Brought to the stage in a new adaptation by award-winning Original Theatre Company, Three Men In A Boat treats audiences to a tale of friendship and mischief in a night to remember.

In an attempt to escape the stresses of city life, three friends, James, Harris and George, decide to take to the river to relax. The holiday, however, soon unravels and falls into chaos.

Time just flies with fun pair Andy and Mike

Assembly Hall Theatre, Tunbridge Wells
Thursday, November 1
assemblyhalltheatre.co.uk

FOLLOWING their smash-hit show Andy and Mike's... Big Box of Bananas, the duo bring you another adventure – this time with a time machine.

Andy Day, star of Andy's

Wild Adventures (CBeebies) and BAFTA-nominated BBC presenter, stars alongside comedy partner Mike James.

Their trademark energetic routine and sense of fun promise to make the show a treat for the whole family.

When the attic at their 'fun pad' – locked many years ago by their great-grandfather – opens, they find a mysterious machine inside that helps them solve the mysteries of time.

Patricia keeps up appearances telling story of wartime pianist

By Joe Bill

joe.bill@archant.co.uk

TO hear "The Bucket residence, the lady of the house speaking" in the 90s was to know that you were viewing one of Britain's most popular sitcoms.

Keeping Up Appearances aired for five series, with enthusiastic socialite Hyacinth Bucket, sorry Bouquet, at the head of the show.

The star was played by Patricia Routledge, also known for her role as the BBC's Hetty Wainthropp, and she now heads to Kent as part of a new show called Admission: One Shilling.

It features the true story of Myra Hess, a concert pianist who performed to British audiences during the Second World War.

Routledge tells the story using letters, broadcasts and conversations the performer had during her active years.

The 83-year-old said: "Myra Hess had a great reputation in the UK, America and Europe. When war broke out in 1939, the Government closed down all theatres, cinemas, galleries, any places that there could be a concentrated mass of people in the event of a bomb attack.

"So there was no entertainment of any kind and Myra Hess thought this was not tolerable and that the people needed something. From her point of view, they needed music.

"She approached the director of The National Gallery in London to set up a series of lunchtime concerts to be available to anyone who wanted to come in their lunch-hour.

"At the beginning she thought 40 or 50 people would turn up, but the response was in its thousands for the first concert. The concerts went on for six-and-a-half years. They were very popular and so was she."

Routledge was fortunate enough to see Hess play in Liverpool during the war, an incident that eventually led to her role in the show.

"It made the most enormous impression on me. I don't think I would be doing this show if I hadn't witnessed her great gift. The force of her personality I will never forget."

The show, which heads to the Stag theatre in Sevenoaks next week, has been compiled by her great-nephew composer Nigel Hess and features the music of Bach, Beethoven, Schubert, Brahms, Schumann and Chopin played by international concert pianist Piers Lane.

The hour-long musical and theatre showcase is touring the UK this winter, but all the travelling is not something that bothers Patricia.

"I enjoy what I do. It doesn't matter where it is - I would go to the Pitcairn Islands if I enjoyed what I was doing. Yes, there is a certain discomfort, but if you enjoy what you're doing then that pales into insignificance."

The actress is still best remembered as Hyacinth Bucket, however you pronounce it, and, with the 42 episodes continuing to air on British TV and around the globe, why wouldn't she be?

But don't be about to think that a comeback is on the cards.

TRUE STORY: Patricia Routledge is to perform the story of pianist Myra Hess

"We have all gone our different ways, and of course, sadly, Geoffrey Hughes [Onslow] died recently," she said.

"We did five series in total and it is shown all over the world still. Yes, there were calls to bring it back, but I thought it had travelled its course, really. It was a very enjoyable period of time.

"I think it's nice to hear people ask 'Is there going to be some more?' rather than 'Oh, is that still on?'."

■ Admission: One Shilling plays at the Stag theatre in Sevenoaks on Saturday, November 3, at 8pm. Tickets cost £23-£25; visit www.stagevenoaks.co.uk or phone the box office on 01732 450175.

SATIS House in Ramsgate is the setting for Kent's latest prestigious art gallery.

Updown Gallery, owned by curator and director Kate Smith, will host exhibitions featuring the best modern and contemporary British, European and US artists.

Smith returns to Kent after more than a decade in London and New York galleries working at the forefront of the international art scene.

She said: "Since the opening of Turner Contemporary in Margate last year, Thanet's art scene has flourished, and we are really excited about adding a different dimension to it.

"The flexibility offered by a privately-run gallery means we will change exhibitions more frequently, keeping the freshness and vibrancy of many London galleries.

The 2013 schedule already includes work by the likes of Bridget Riley, Sir Howard Hodgkin, Ben Nicholson, Ian Davenport and Piers Secunda.

CHRISTMAS DINING

Why here...
The Drum Inn is a 300-year-old building with a fascinating history of military memoirs and smuggler stories that are still told to this day in the pub placed at the heart of Kent. Many of its original features, including two working fireplaces, give the venue an inviting and relaxing atmosphere. The team at the Ashford pub serves award-winning guest ales that are changed regularly, as well as traditional, freshly-cooked pub food seven days a week. Look out for the steak-night deals offering a steak meal and large glass of wine for just £14.95. On Friday, November 2, The Party to the beat of the drum during the holiday season

Drum Inn hosts a Guy Fawkes night with traditional bonfire and fireworks. Enjoy real ales and mulled cider with a hog roast – tickets are priced at £5. Pre-purchase family tickets (two adults, two children) for £14, or purchase on the night for £18. At Christmas time, the menu will offer a range of traditional Christmas fare, as well as classic roasts and alternative options including vegetarian meals. The Christmas menu is on the pub's website.

On the menu...
The Drum Inn's day-to-day menu offers traditional food like beer Brie fritters, breaded whitebait, battered cod, 10oz rump steak, home-made steak-and-ale pie, the BBQ chicken melt, seabass or traditional bangers and mash. Prices range from £8.96 to £14 for a main course.

How to book...

Why here...
Set deep in the Kent countryside, the boutique hotel and restaurant of Elvey Farm makes a statement... you instantly realise that this is somewhere special. Tucked away on a medieval farmstead, Elvey is made up of a cluster of buildings centred on a beautiful 16th-century barn overlooking sunny hills in the summer months, but it really comes into its own during the winter – and especially on the run-up to Christmas. The log fire crackles away in the bar, the restaurant is decked out in traditional Christmas garb, the frost glistens in the surrounding fields and the smells from the Surge in prices is 'evidence of life in the market'

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

HOUSE-SELLERS upped their asking prices by more than £8,000 in October, the biggest rise in eight months, according to property website Rightmove.

The typical property asking price rose by 3.5 per cent month on month to £243,168, with the South East performing slightly above the UK average as it saw a 3.9 per cent increase.

The website said that the figures were "evidence of some life in the market".

However, it suggested the upturn was most likely to be due to a lack of properties for sale, meaning would-be buyers had less choice.

Prices are 1.5 per cent higher than a year ago, going a long way towards reversing the £11,000 drop in prices between June and September that the market saw as events like the European Championships and Olympics dominated.

The Council of Mortgage Lenders (CML) said mortgage-lending to home-buyers hit a two-year high in August. However, it added that it was too early to say what long-term effect recently-launched Government schemes to kick-start lending were having.

Mortgage availability has been increasing since an £80 billion funding for lending scheme was launched at the start of August, although much of this has been concentrated on people with larger deposits of at least 20 per cent.

Lenders have also toughened their borrowing criteria in recent months and Rightmove said estate agents were still reporting that mortgages were no easier to obtain.

Miles Shipside, director of Rightmove, said an increase in asking prices was "most likely attributable to the continued shortage of new property supply".

He said: "Sellers need to be mindful that the window of opportunity to sell before the traditional winter slowdown is a narrow one, and they risk being left out in the cold for months until the spring market thaw."

"In addition, estate agents are reporting that mortgages are still no easier to obtain, with risk-averse lenders nit-picking every detail of the mortgage application paperwork, even from buyers who seem squeaky clean."

ON THE MOVE: Despite asking prices increasing by £8,000, June to September saw a fall of £11,000

Financial incentive offered in council scheme for tenants willing to downsize DARTFORD'S council tenants who do not utilise all the space in their homes are being encouraged to downsize to make room for families who need more space.

The Downsize for Cash scheme offers a financial reward to secure tenants who are under-occupying their homes and helps them to move to a smaller property, freeing up larger properties for families in need.

If the tenant is eligible to take part in the scheme, they will receive £500 for each bedroom and parlour released, plus £100 to help with moving costs.

Additional funding may be available for removal and packing expenses, too. For example, a couple moving from a three-bedroom house to a one-bedroom place would receive £1,100.

In addition, the borough council will do its best to move the tenant to an area of Dartford of their choice.

Pat Coleman, portfolio holder for housing, said: "The council aims to assist as many people as possible in finding suitable housing for themselves and their families. To do this, we need our existing tenants' help in making under-occupied larger properties available to families in housing need.

"The Downsize for Cash scheme makes the move rewarding for all involved."

ORDER books are open for the latest and fourth-generation Range Rover – the most luxurious yet. But it didn't start out like that. When the original arrived in 1970, it was more comfortable than its Land Rover sister – still soldiering on as the venerable Defender – but the interior was designed to be hosed out and to carry occasional ewes and lambs or straw bales. And it wasn't offered with four doors until 1981, probably the point at which it started to be seen as a luxury car in the making, as a go-anywhere people-lugger for country estates and then, increasingly, as a car to grace both Chelsea and the Cotswolds.

Now it is Land Rover's luxury flagship, heading a sub-brand including the Range Rover Sport and much-in-demand Evoque compact SUV.

The new Range Rover (from £71,295) is lighter, stronger and more refined, largely due to the world's first lightweight all-aluminium monocoque SUV body, which saves a hefty 420 kilos over the previous car, with consequent benefits to fuel economy and CO2 emissions.

The first cars arrive with customers in January 2013, but Land Rover will follow up later in the year with a diesel-hybrid version expected to emit 169g/km of CO2 – that's on a par with many family hatchbacks.

Land Rover, which once had production halted briefly by Greenpeace activists, is obviously sensitive to the drive for eco-friendliness; the new Evoque range includes the Pure front-wheel-drive eco-model, and the latest Range Rover is being produced in a new low-energy manufacturing facility at the Solihull plant.

But there is also still a lot of 'Britishness' about the car that has helped power the revival of the Jaguar Land Rover group globally.

Land Rover global brand director John Edwards said of the latest model: "The Range Rover is our flagship and a true British success story, designed, engineered and built in Britain. "Its distinctive design, breadth of capability and class-leading refinement and comfort have always made it unique.

"When we asked our customers what they wanted us to change, they told us 'Don't change it, just make it better'. We set out to create not just the world's finest luxury SUV, but the world's finest luxury vehicle."

Despite all the talk about luxury, the car has not lost sight of its original USP as a comfortable go-anywhere car; Land Rover says the new aluminium structure body and latest chassis technologies have taken the vehicle "to another level, both in the breadth and accessibility of its off-road capability and its on-road handling and refinement."

As such, it also becomes the halo model for the rest of the Land Rover range, also including the multiple-award-winning Land Rover Discovery and its smaller sister, the Freelander.

Lighter Range Rover continues to make luxurious new heights

CLASS ACT: Range Rover has made its fourth-generation model lighter, stronger and more refined, making a big difference to fuel economy and CO2 emissions while keeping the car's distinctive design and comfort

... the price, but then exclusivity is part of the deal with the Range Rover, which has morphed from farmer's utility runabout to executive 4x4 limo.

... anyone is yet convinced a Range Rover can be green, but the aluminium body and forthcoming diesel-hybrid will certainly aid its eco PR.

... how the car's design has evolved in style and technology without really changing both its character and ability to conquer terrain in comfort.

A black Chevrolet Cruze Station Wagon is shown driving on a winding asphalt road that curves through a lush, green landscape. The car is in motion, with a slight blur on the wheels and background to convey speed. The road has a white line marking. In the background, there are rolling hills and trees under a soft, hazy sky. The overall tone is scenic and emphasizes the car's suitability for family travel.

THE FAMILY IS NOW COMPLETE.

Honda Jazz gets more pizzazz

By Steve Loader
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

THOUGH it's called the Jazz, Honda has waited an age to give us a variation on the theme.

In the meantime, this supermini-cum-MPV played the same old tune, proclaiming its versatility, reliability and general niceness; not very jazzy but a theme appealing to an older, easy-listening fanbase.

But now we have the sporty new Jazz Si (£14,550) going some way to widening the audience for this admirable little car.

Before anyone gets up and starts be-bopping, though, Honda insists it is only a limited edition, albeit one it is keen to promote with a zero per cent private lease deal (PCP) of £149 per month with a 27 per cent deposit.

What you get is sharp colours – black, red, white and bright blue – plus bespoke spoilers front and back, side skirts, privacy glass and eye-catching 16-inch two-tone alloys.

Visually, it's a bit of a revelation.

I drew the short straw with a white test car, though; the Si looks best in black or red, while yellow would have been a good option – it's great on standard Jazz models (from £11,605).

Attempts to 'jazz' the interior are less effective; the leather-trimmed steering wheel is welcome and cruise control is thrown in, but it lacks something and the bespoke black and silver seats look a bit tacky even if they are comfy and supportive.

It's not all cosmetics, though; the Si suspension has been beefed up to deliver improved straight-line stability and body control, while the electric power-steering has been tweaked for improved feel and response.

The standard Jazz is a driver pleaser anyway, but these changes do sharpen it up without affecting a decent ride and long-distance refinement.

However, the Si doesn't quite walk the talk on the power front; this Jazz is a variation on the existing 1.4ES model (£13,750), which has a 98bhp petrol engine and five-speed gearbox.

SHIFTING UP A GEAR: Honda's new limited-edition Jazz Si comes in four colours – black, red, white and blue – plus bespoke spoilers, side skirts, 16-inch two-tone alloy wheels and privacy glass, although changes to the interior are less effective

It's good enough for 0-62mph in 11.5 seconds, but that's not quite the pizzazz required for a sporting Jazz, while a six-speed gearbox would offer more relaxation at the top end when motorway cruising.

But perhaps the Si really is a limited edition, a toe in the water by Honda before diving in with something more overtly sporty.

Most would-be Si buyers will be happy it looks the part anyway yet retains all the things they love about the Jazz and translated into a string of awards, most recently the JD Power customer satisfaction and reliability survey's supermini of the year and Which? best used supermini.

A Made in Britain stamp, courtesy of manufacture at the brand's Swindon plant, adds to its appeal, but the car's ace is Tardis-like capacity within relatively compact dimensions, plus clever packaging.

The rear seats fold flat for quick transformation into a van, but the bases also hinge and lock upwards, allowing extra stowage beneath or side loading of a bicycle, for instance – though you need to whip the front wheel off first. The car seats five comfortably – rear legroom is excellent – and slightly higher than a standard supermini, giving good visibility out of a glassy cabin.

Even with the 1.4-litre engine of the Si, you can also average some 50mpg.

You could get more from a diesel, but these take the fun out of small cars and cost more upfront anyway so you need to cover great mileages to recoup the consumption benefits.

Honda doesn't offer a diesel anyway, preferring a petrol-electric hybrid Jazz option, costing from £16,300 and averaging about 10mpg more than the 1.4-litre unit on the Si while being only slightly faster in acceleration.

Cascada open to the world

AFTER teasing glimpses, Vauxhall has finally taken the wraps off its Cascada four-seat convertible that is set to arrive in early 2013.

Based on the existing Astra and Insignia, with styling cues from both, it is expected to cost about £25,000, undercutting premium rivals.

It's yet another elegant offering from a brand at the top of its game under British design guru Mark Adams.

Budget power from BlueGT

VOLKSWAGEN claims it has the answer for customers wanting petrol performance and diesel miserliness – the Polo BlueGT (from £17,400).

The new car uses cylinder deactivation in its turbocharged 1.4-litre petrol engine. It can do 0-62mph in 7.9 seconds, but two cylinders can shut down automatically under lighter loadings, allowing 61.4mpg on the combined cycle and CO2 emissions of just 107g/km.

Yeti is number one for Which?

CONSUMER watchdog Which? says the Skoda Yeti is the most reliable car in the UK.

In a survey completed by owners of 47,000 vehicles, the petrol-powered model ranked number one in the SUV/4x4 classes with a 98 per cent reliability score.

The Yeti diesel model came in at sixth place.

Chevy's Cruze is now fully up to speed

By Steve Loader

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

AMERICAN car giant General Motors treads a fine line in marketing the recently-arrived Chevrolet value brand alongside its long-established Vauxhall sister.

There have been awkward moments, such as Chevy's Captiva looking too much of a bargain against the closely-related Vauxhall Antara.

But Chevy also took a hit in 2009, when it launched its mid-range Cruze model as a saloon; the UK market is a graveyard for small saloons, but it probably helped ensure the then-new-generation Vauxhall Astra hatchback didn't get a hard time from a cheaper Cruze equivalent.

That situation has been rectified, though, with a Cruze hatchback arriving last year, now complemented by the new Cruze Station Wagon, priced from £15,375. Despite its racy looks, this is a practical load-lugger offering 500 litres of boot space or 1,478 litres with rear seats flat to the floor – some of the best stats in its class.

Typically from Chevy, the new wagon also comes laden with kit and the marque's standard five-year/100,000-mile warranty.

Three trim levels are offered – LS, LT and LTZ Nav – with standard equipment including air-con, electrically-heated and adjustable door mirrors, front electric windows with 'express down' facility, roof rails, rear and boot 12v power sockets, cargo-restraint hooks, remote central door-locking and electronic boot release. You will need to trade up to LT (from £16,475) to get alloy wheels, though.

Engine choice is from two petrols – 1.6 and 1.8-litre – and a 1.7-litre diesel.

Chevrolet has also confirmed its new Trax compact SUV will be arriving soon. It was the brand's biggest news at the recent Paris Motor Show and upholds a proud history of Chevrolet SUVs – Chevy claims to have invented the type more than 75 years ago with the Suburban Carryall.

But the chunky Trax is a thoroughly modern take and will be offered with a choice of turbo-charged 1.4-litre petrol, normally-aspirated 1.6-litre petrol and 1.7-litre turbodiesel – 4x4 will be available on the two turbo units. Chevy says the car will be both practical and good to drive, and we can expect aggressive pricing.

■ DOVER-based Chevrolet dealer Perrys is offering free 12-month membership to the exclusive Tastecard dining club for customers who take a test drive before Monday, December 31.

Tastecard is the UK's largest diners' club, offering members 50 per cent off their total food bill or 2-for-1 offers at more than 5,500 UK restaurants. But Chevrolet's autumn menu also includes zero per cent finance over five years across the whole range until the end of the year.

This means the Spark 1.2 LT five-door city car, for example, is available for 60 monthly payments of just £149 with a £1,755 deposit.

Commercial Vehicles

By Steve Loader

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

DEMAND for new vans has been on a roller-coaster ride lately.

These humble vehicles might be less visible and carry less than HGVs, but they oil the wheels of the economy by supplying local deliveries, servicing important sectors like construction and mobilising tradesmen.

Hardly surprising, then, that when the recession hit UK PLC, this vehicle sector drove off a cliff, plummeting 60 per cent in 2009 against 2008. But there were grounds for optimism when we turned the spotlight on this vehicle sector in January this year; registrations for new vans in 2011 had bounced back to almost 17 per cent up against the previous year.

Could it be that vans were signalling a turnaround for the UK? Sadly not, as the sector has reflected this year's faltering economy, including the double-dip phase we had all dreaded.

But signs of another market rally are here, with new van registrations down just 2.6 per cent over the past 12 months, while the new '62 registration plate month of September showed a 1.1 improvement against the same month in 2011, with major growth for pick-ups (+17.2 per cent) and vans in the up-to-two-tonne payload category (+8.8 per cent).

It was enough for a cautious note from the motor industry mouthpiece, the SMMT, chief executive Paul Everitt saying: "The September-plate change provided enough of a boost to stabi-

ON THE MOVE:

The Relay is Citroën's versatile flagship load-lugger, far left. It is popular for low running costs, while Mercedes has driven down operating costs through models like the Sprinter lise van demand in a challenging economic environment."

Anecdotal evidence suggests a recovery is long overdue anyway, with signs of pent-up demand even before this year's renewed crisis of confidence.

Despite the growing durability and comfort levels of modern vans, operators large and small have been pushing their vehicle replacement programmes far beyond normal limits in the face of the economic downturn, only to find that ageing vehicles start to look tatty – with public-image consequences – and incur more unprofitable downtime for maintenance.

Van powertrain technology is beginning to echo that of the car sector, so there are real commercial and public-relations benefits, too, from running a leaner and meaner fleet with better fuel consumption and lower emissions.

For Kent firms operating into London, there is also an opportunity to save on the capital's congestion charge by buying small eco vans with CO₂ emissions that are below 100g/km.

Smaller operators are also playing a part in the recovering because they are being forced to buy new vehicles due to a scarcity of decent used stock, caused by the big boys hanging on to their fleets for longer and running up galactic mileages that make them less desirable secondhand.

Indeed, various industry sources suggest the van market faces a 'black hole' in supply in the years ahead due to new van registrations tumbling during the recession.

Make way for White Van Ma'am

HIGH ROLLERS: Three leading market contenders: Citroën's high-cube big-selling Berlingo; Peugeot's multiple-award-winning compact/city van the Bipper; and Vauxhall's mid-size panel van the Vivaro

By Steve Loader

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

WHITE Van Man has a mate – White Van Ma'am.

According to a new survey, our perception of the person behind the wheel of the white van speeding by in the outside lane of the motorway needs to change.

That person is no longer someone with discarded drinks bottles and a copy of The Sun – open at page three – stuffed behind the windscreen and carrying a bull terrier as his navigator but an altogether more discerning individual – and quite possibly a woman.

Astonishingly, the survey from AXA Business Insurance also showed that he or she is likely to be an opera-lover (43 per cent) and more than 60 per cent had not been booked for a traffic offence in the past 10 years despite more than half spending at least 10 hours a week behind the wheel.

AXA Business Insurance managing director

Darrell Sansom said: "Commercial-van-drivers have been given a pretty bad reputation over the past decade, but the stereotypes around them couldn't be further from the reality.

"What we're finding is that as more and more women are driving vans, coupled with a higher degree of professionalism among the van-driving community, the stereotypical perception of a 'white van man' is becoming a thing of the past."

It seemed clear from the poll that most van-drivers objected to the white-van-man stereotype – well under half (39 per cent) reckoned it was accurate, but only 8 per cent owned up to being that man.

In any case, a third of the drivers surveyed were women, which might or might not explain why cooking and gardening were high on the list of hobbies, although it seems there are some pastimes that go with the job – 82 per cent of those interviewed regularly went to a football match or watched one live on TV... hopefully not while driving.

Innovation drives sector forwards

By Steve Loader

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

FOR years vans were seen as indistinct and anonymous boxes, but the sector has been revolutionised by new designs, technology, trends and roles.

And operators have seen economy, efficiency and flexibility soar, while drivers have enjoyed better performance, refinement and safety.

Many of the latter benefits have come about because of crossover designs from cars, bringing creature comforts like air-con and a decent sound system, plus top-notch safety.

Load capacities have also widened, from as little as three cubic metres for a car-derived courier van or company runabout, up to a 17-cubic metre delivery van, while pick-ups and small side-loading/tipper bodies have become popular in construction and farming.

Access has improved, too. Many larger vans have low floors in the driving compartment for easy access and most vans come with at least one sliding door as standard to aid loading – many buyers take the option of a second 'slider'. There is now a choice usually of side-opening twin doors or a high-lift tailgate as well.

Petrol-driven vans have all but been displaced by the better economy, range and low-down pulling power of four- and five-cylinder diesels, which also offer extended service periods, lower maintenance costs and longer-lasting parts.

BIG DEAL: Vauxhall has just launched the capacious new Combo to cope with high-bulk deliveries

LIFT-OFF: Toyota's Dyna appeals to those needing dropside/tipping capability on a more compact chassis

FREE UP: Economy of vans like the Mercedes-Benz Vito has underpinned the e-commerce revolution

Fuel-saving and efficient-cruising six-speed manual gearboxes are also the norm, although urban operators are turning increasingly to automatic, semi-automatic or clutchless transmissions. These can usually be driven with manual selection anyway but are ideal for the stop-start traffic conditions of the town and city and can be as economical as a manual.

The latter is also particularly suited to one of the new roles for vans: servicing the booming e-commerce/internet-based businesses.

These often require small cargo volumes but lots of stops and even greater choice of van and loading flexibility.

Whether it is a book or large item of office equipment, private and commercial customers often expect the goods to be there within 24 hours.

The size of households is also decreasing, while the number of single-occupant households is increasing.

This has an effect on day-to-day requirements – people shop in smaller quantities and need smaller packs. By 2015, the daily volume of parcels is expected to have doubled to about 14 million across the UK and Europe compared with 1996.

The downside is increasing fuel prices and emissions, plus access restrictions to cities and towns, so many van operators are already upgrading to greener vehicles that will also save on operating costs and boost their image and PR.

Step forward 'Pick-up Truck Man'

By Steve Loader

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

YOU'VE heard of 'White Van Man', but is there now another road-going species – 'Pick-up Truck Man'?

Pick-ups – also known as 'utes' (utility trucks) and 'bakkies' in other parts of the world – have rocketed in number in the UK lately, both as commercial and leisure vehicles.

Sales are also illuminating an otherwise gloomy small-commercial-vehicles market, with a hefty 17 per cent leap during the new '62 registration month of September against the same month in 2011.

The unanswered question, though, is whether this popularity is due to tax anomalies that make the pick-up attractive to private users or whether commercial operators see them as relatively cheap yet capacious recession busters, available with two- or four-door cabs and, in the case of 4x4 models, able to go most places on a farm or construction site.

Could it be also that traditional off-roaders lack the carrying capacity and have become too gentrified and expensive? Or do the interlopers cater for an inner desire to wear a check shirt, jeans and cowboy boots?

There is certainly an air of Americana about contenders like the new Isuzu D-Max, Mitsubishi L200 – the model that caused the UK pick-up market to take off – and the legendary Toyota Hilux, the vehicle that Top Gear failed to kill off with fire, water and violence.

And there is no need to rough it, either; dealers find most buyers want 'up-spec' double-cab versions that can take the family at weekends, complete with camping gear, bikes and so on, all safe from the weather beneath a removable hardtop cover for the rear loading bay.

Isuzu, for instance, has just launched a £900 'Vision' upgrade for audio, navigation and communications on the D-Max – the kind of pack usually found on executive saloons.

However, not every pick-up-buyer wants all the bells and whistles, which is why Fiat launched a cost-effective version of its award-winning Doblò Cargo van. The Doblò Work Up is a 'drop-side' vehicle with compact external dimensions for easy use in urban areas, though Fiat says it appeals to the agriculture, construction, maintenance or city-parks-services sectors, too.

But this isn't really the vehicle for would-be Marlboro Man private buyers and we asked Sittingbourne accountant Ray Backler, of small-business specialist Capsa Accounting, about the tax appeal of buying a 'rough-tough' pick-up.

"Company car tax is onerous, but the tax regime for vans recognises most people need these for business, so the burden is more modest," he said.

"Many in business do not realise pick-up trucks, including the family-friendly double-cab variety, are classified as vans for tax purposes rather than cars. The van is taxed based on a flat-rate charge of £3,000, and if any fuel is provided this is subject to a further flat-rate charge of £500, making £3,500 in total that is taxable.

"Of this, a standard-rate taxpayer will then only actually pay £700 in tax – a huge saving compared with virtually any company car."

NO ACTION

MARGATE'S Alex Rhodes spent the majority of his career as a professional but never felt like much was being done to curb racism. Before signing at the Ryman Premier club this summer the 30-year-old winger had spells as a pro with Brentford, Bradford, Rotherham and Swindon. He first encountered racist abuse as a teenager when playing youth football for London side Newham Market. "It happened when I was 15," he said. "More than anything, I didn't expect it. "I've had monkey chants, people calling me a coon, people saying the 'N' word. "I have dealt with it. "I have grown up to not be too concerned about it." As pro players have done this week he once wore the Kick It Out campaign T-shirt. "You never really heard much about what they [Kick It Out] were doing to try and help," he said. "You might have to wear the T-shirt every now and then, but that's as much as you would hear about it. "They say they are trying to help, but you can't if there is already a mindset in people." Non-league football comes with smaller crowds which means fans can be heard easily by those out on the pitch. But, additionally, they have nowhere to hide either. "I don't know if they [racist fans] are shying away from saying things because they know they are going to be heard more easily," he said. "But it still happens, whether they are screaming and shouting or if they are talking quietly – it definitely goes on."

SPECIAL REPORT

The ugly face of racism is still haunting the beautiful game

By Greg Miles
greg.miles@archant.co.uk

THE vile stench of racism which has been thrust back into the national headlines in recent weeks, continues to linger even at non-league level, some of the county's players this week confirmed. In a special report on the controversial issue, we spoke to players who have plied their trade in the professional and semi-pro game about their first-hand experiences. It makes for sobering, and sometimes surprising reading. From the chants directed at the England Under-21 team during a recent trip to Serbia, or John Terry's recent FA ban for using racist language against Anton Ferdinand last season, it is clear more needs to be done to eradicate the ignorance displayed by a small minority. The Kick It Out campaign, set up to tackle racism in the game, has also come under fire from a number of black players who say it is not doing enough. Its most recent 'week of action' ends this Monday, but will be remembered more for the likes of Rio Ferdinand and Jason Roberts refusing to wear the campaign's T-shirts. It's led the Professional Footballers Association (PFA) to issue a six-point plan for improvement after what it called a 'damaging' week for the sport. Kick It Out has been supported off the pitch by the Kent FA at an event held by Guru Nanak FC in Gravesend. Guru Nanak is Kent's largest ethnic sports club. As part of the campaign's Raise Your Game initiative, members were given an insight into employment opportunities with the game. Yet while the vast majority of the thousands of fans who flock to follow Kent sides every week never resort to racist abuse, it is clear the issue requires no let up in the pressure to ensure it is removed from the terraces. The occasional comment may not seem to suggest a widespread issue, but all fans should ensure it disappears completely.

Picture: DAVE COULDRIDGE

THEY WERE SHOUTING 'THROW HIM A BANANA' AS I LAY UNCONSCIOUS

MAIDSTONE United's Ade Olorunda feels racism is accepted as being 'part and parcel of the game'. The striker, who joined the Stones with his brother Tim in the summer, was subjected to a torrent of abuse when he returned to his former side Hastings United as a Tonbridge Angels player in February last year. After an accidental collision saw him knocked unconscious, he woke up in hospital where his family told him what was being said by some fans while he lay on the pitch. "They were shouting 'throw him a banana', 'let him die' and making monkey chants," he said. "It came from a few mindless individuals. "Racism just kind of gets nodded off as part and parcel of the game. If I said I didn't hear and see things I would be lying. I might hear something once or twice a season; it depends on the level of the game and what's happened. It's ignorance, especially when some of the people that do it have black players in their team." He said offenders resort to racism when initial attempts to wind players up doesn't work. "If saying 'you effing this and effing that' doesn't have any affect on you they might try something else to put you off your game," he said. "If something is said you don't tend to know who it is in the big crowds, if you're in a crowd of 300 people you're not going to get away with it." He added: "I'm a foster child and my parents are both white, they have always taught me to be thick-skinned."

Invicta's King developing his game to avoid attention

FOLKESTONE Invicta striker Stuart King admits he's having to mix his game up in order to keep defenders on their toes. The 25-year-old bagged an impressive 24 goals from 24 starts in his first season in the Ryman One South last term, which landed him the Golden Boot award as well as a place in the team of the season. That goal tally was despite missing more than a third of the campaign while he recovered from an operation on his wrist to repair nerve damage that was sustained when he broke his arm several years ago. He's again leading the scoring charts this season with 10 in the league, but he's finding it more of a challenge as his reputation precedes him. "I have definitely noticed a difference," he said. "Defenders are doubling and trebling up on me at times. It was straight away in the first game of the season at Worthing at home."

King is more than confident in his own ability having bagged nearly a goal a game when he helped Whitstable Town to promotion from the Kent League Premier Division in the 2006/07 season. From there he skipped the Ryman One South moving to Ramsgate in the Ryman Premier where he found his chances limited, and so he moved back to the Kent League with Herne Bay where he netted 17 goals. A short spell at Thamesmead Town in the Ryman One North followed before he arrived at the Buzzlins Stadium for the start of last season. Having earned praise for his form last term, he's keen to prove it's no fluke. "It was my first season in the Ryman One South last year so I was a bit of an unknown, and now I'm in my second year I've got to prove myself," he said. The added attention on the pitch has meant he's needed to adapt his game as he continues to be relied upon to find the net for Folkestone.

"You just learn to do things differently and then get around it," he said. "In theory it should set someone else free. If there's 10 against 10 and two are on me that leaves someone spare. "I'm always working on my off the ball movement. At the beginning of the season I was doing a lot more off the ball and playing off the shoulder, but now I'm starting to sit between the two centre halves a bit more. "I just judge it in each game. If I'm up against a nippy defender I can mix it up a bit." King conceded that he would be kicking himself if he didn't one day try to prove his worth at a higher level, with or without Folkestone where he is under contract for this term. "My contract finishes at the end of the season, so if there's not an offer, I will look to trial somewhere." He added: "I know I can score goals in the Ryman Premier, there's no doubt about that."

TRAVELS: King in action at former club Herne Bay

NO TRUST

FORMER Gillingham keeper Jason Brown was one of a number of players who questioned the authorities this week over a lack of action to stop racism in football. Brown who made 126 appearances in five years at Priestfield before leaving in 2006 to join Premiership Blackburn Rovers, felt there was a lack of belief in the authorities from players. Speaking to Sky Sports News he said: "Enough is enough. If you look at those who didn't wear the Kick It Out T-shirts, then there is a lack of belief in the authorities and everyone can see it now for what it is." Now at Scottish Premier League side Aberdeen, the Welsh international was also left surprised after a conversation with Lord Ousley, chairman of the Kick It Out campaign. Brown explained: "I spoke to Lord Ousley the other day and what was quite disturbing for me was his last comment of 'I'm not here to speak out for black players who are wealthy'. "Does money come in to race? If you've got money do you have to take it? That's disappointing. How can you sport the T-shirt or the badge when the chairman says he cannot stand up for black players who are wealthy? "We're not here to become rebels, we love the game but at the same time, if the people we trust, the PFA, Kick It Out, are not doing what we ask of them, what are they here for? "We don't want to be rebels and breakaway [to form a rival anti-racism group], but if they're not doing enough, they're driving us to go down that road."

Oystermen can be a force but only with fan backing

By Greg Miles

WHITSTABLE Town chairman Gary Johnson insists there are no gold-lined pockets at the club and has instead called upon the fans to help push it forward on and off the pitch.

Justin Luchford's side have been in the Ryman One South for five years following their promotion from the Kent League, but have battled against relegation since. Johnson, who took over as chairman in the summer following two years as vice chairman, is keen to see the club push forward.

However, improvements on and off the pitch can only happen if more fans start coming through the turnstiles to put the club in a better financial position.

"We could do with more people getting involved who are younger to take the club forward," said the 48-year-old. "There are people expressing interest, but there's a difference between expressing interest and getting involved.

"We have one part-time employee and that's about all the club can afford. If you think you can do better or add value, come and talk to me. We want to get involved in the community and get the business community involved with us. We also want to resurrect the supporters' club."

The club saw a boost in attendances recently on non-league day which took place on October 13 when there were no Premier League or Championship fixtures because of England's international the day before.

The idea was to encourage fans of pro clubs to SUPPORT:

Whitstable Town chairman Gary Johnson wants the community to come out and support the club as they seek to build on recent attendances at the Belmont Ground visit and support their local non-league sides.

"Our hands are financially tied if we don't have the supporters coming through the gates," he said. "We had a number of people take advantage of the concessions; 255 was a nice gate to get. If we could get that week in and week out, things would be a lot better financially.

"We are not the Man City of the Ryman League contrary to what people are saying. My pockets are not lined with gold, or silver, but what I do bring in is commercial acumen."

He is hoping to put that to use to improve things around the Belmont Ground.

"We would meet the ground-grading standard now for the next league's criteria," he said. "If we wanted to go beyond that we would need to make some minor alterations. You need the extra turnstiles and our facilities would need upgrading. That's part of our plans now. We need more fences, we would like to make changes to our bar and changing rooms, improve our tea bar and medical office facilities."

Allen's inclusion of youth can only be a good thing for Gills

MICHAEL Freiter became the latest youngster to be given a taste of life with the first team this week at Gillingham.

The 16-year-old warmed the bench on Tuesday night as Martin Allen's side lost their first away game of the season 2-1 at Torquay.

Allen has made no secret of his desire to give younger players their chance to impress.

One of his first decisions when he joined in the summer was to include midfielder Bradley Dack for friendly matches in pre-season.

The 18-year-old has gone on to become a regular member of Allen's squad.

"I have got great reports from Darren," Allen said.

"I get reports from him every Monday on how the youth team have been playing and then every Thursday. Patto (Patterson) reports on how the reserves played on the Tuesday and Freiter had done well.

"I saw him a few weeks ago at Tonbridge. I thought he looked very accomplished. He was only coming down as an extra squad player, but Charlie Allen had to go to hospital - he's got a fracture in his hand.

"The young lad was only coming for the experience, like we have done a lot with our youth players through the season so far. I think half-a-dozen have been with us.

"Freiter has done well, if we had been three or four up then he would have gone on."

Meanwhile, goalkeeper Ross Flitney has this week joined Blue Square South side Eastleigh on loan for a month.

Bay players given a break as boss is on the look-out

HERNE Bay boss Simon Halsey has given his players the weekend off as his side take a break from league action.

Bay are not in action this weekend as other clubs catch up following cup commitments in recent weeks. It means Halsey and coach Hugo Langton will have the chance to get out and scout up coming opposition.

"I have given the players the weekend off," he said. "As much as we want to get them in on a Saturday morning it's nice to let them have time with their families because they're committed the rest of the time."

He was pleased to go into the break with their eight-game unbeaten run still intact following last weekend's 2-1 win over Horsham, which put them third in the league before this weekend.

"We wanted to maximise our points last weekend knowing that we had this one off, otherwise we could have gone down the table," he said. "There's a good buzz around the club at the moment."

Meanwhile striker George Landais, who joined from Sweden in the summer, has signed for Ryman One South rivals Tooting & Mitcham.

"It was hard for him travelling all the way from London and not being able to play," said Halsey. "I have got a few other lads chomping at the bit to get a game, but I can't go changing things as we're unbeaten."

CONTINUITY: Canterbury have had a steady side

Canterbury no longer goal-shy as they hit the heights in Premier CANTERBURY coach David Stevens has pinpointed the home-grown nature of his squad as a key factor in their blistering start to the season.

Confidence is high at Polo Farm as the city's men's side sit second in the Premier League on equal points with table-toppers Beeston, but a place below them because of their inferior goal difference.

The league leaders are the only side to have beaten them this season as Canterbury suffered a 7-1 loss to the Nottingham team in the second game of the campaign. It's an impressive feat for the side that won promotion from the Conference East last term.

While many sides are missing key players who are taking a break from the game following their exploits at the Olympics, Canterbury are at full capacity which Stevens feels is playing its part in their fantastic start.

"We have obviously been delighted with our form. It's been a really good start," he said. "As a group, Canterbury is home-grown.

"The players have come through the club so a lot of them have played together for a long time."

He feels that a lack of potency in front of goal had been a major factor in recent relegations from the Premier League, but those problems have now been put to bed.

"They have worked hard and had a long pre-season," he said. "Many of them have experience of the Premier League from before when they struggled.

"They know what to expect now, and they are not 19 or 20 anymore, they are a little bit older.

"When we were relegated we had a young team so you could say they were less experienced. We struggled to score goals in the Premier League.

"We have worked on our forward line and we have got a much stronger group of forwards. In our last year in the Premier League we were making a lot of chances and not taking them.

"It's amazing how subtle the change is from being at the bottom of the table to the top. The group has always trained hard, but this year we have had a lot of continuity."

They haven't struggled for goals so far this season, scoring 23 goals in their six league games so far, with their biggest win coming last weekend as they beat Hampstead and Westminster 6-1 at Polo Farm.
